How composer Thomas Adès made the City of Angels his muse

The darkly-melodic trio ASHRR are off to a fast start

The unapologetically violent TV adaption of The Boys and its themes of the disenfranchised versus the 1 percent hit close to home in the age of Trump and #MeToo.

LET’S HEAR IT FOR THE BOYS

by BRETT CALLWOOD
TUESDAYS 7PM
CENTRAL COURTYARD

7/16
Boogaloo Assassins

7/23
Bria Skonberg

7/30
José Rizo’s Mongorama

8/6
Marquis Hill Blacktet

Nominal donation for wine, beer, and cheese selection with 100% of proceeds benefitting Project Angel Food.
Schedule subject to change.

Produced by KJAZZ 88.1 FM RADIO.

Hollywood & Highland HollywoodandHighland.com
KCET ORIGINAL

BLUE SKY METROPOLIS

The untold story of aerospace in Southern California

TUNE IN OR STREAM JULY 14 AT 8PM

kcet.org/bluesky   #BlueSkyMetropolis
A chance to take a stand for immigrants and what's decent, a kid's cake decorating competition and farm-to-table community meal, panoramic paintings, and more to do and see in L.A. this week.

GO LA...7

Out this month, more than a decade after the unapologetically violent comic series was published, Amazon Prime's adaption of The Boys and its themes of the disenfranchised versus the 1 percent hits close to home in the age of Trump and #MeToo. BY BRETT CALLWOOD.

EAT & DRINK...15

Italian subs may not be the food most associated with Los Angeles, but L.A.'s hold their own. Are you Team Godmother or Team Stepmother? BY MICHELE STUEVEN.

ARTS...17

British composer and L.A. transplant Thomas Adès discusses his artistic mien and upcoming, AI machine-driven dance extravaganza with the L.A. Philharmonic at the Music Center. BY SHANA NYS DAMBROT.

CULTURE...18

SLUSH: Local landmarks on the move, rent hikes and L.A. Weekly celebrates wins at the L.A. Press Club's Southern California Journalism Awards. BY ROY JURGENS.

FILM...19

NATHANIEL BELL explores the movies opening this week, including Stuber's twist on the buddy cop formula.

MUSIC...21

L.A.-based darkwave/post-rock band ASHRR are off to a quick start after last year's debut album, Oscillator. BY BRETT CALLWOOD.

ADVERTISING CLASSIFIED...
EMPLOYMENT...
RENTALS...
BULLETIN BOARD...

Register online at pacifica.edu or call 805.969.3626

Now Enrolling for Fall 2019

Pacifica is accredited by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges (WASC). Gainful Employment Information is available at pacifica.edu/gainfulemployment.

ON THE COVER:
Photos courtesy of Amazon Studios. Comic illustration by Darick Robinson, courtesy of Dynamite Comics

LA WEEKLY (ISSN #0192-1940 & USPS 461-370) is published weekly by LA Weekly LP, 724 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, CA 90015. Periodicals postage paid at Los Angeles, CA. LA Weekly is available free of charge in Los Angeles County, limited to one copy per reader. Additional copies of the current issue of LA Weekly may be purchased for $1, payable in advance at the LA Weekly office. Outside Los Angeles County, the single-copy cost of LA Weekly is $1. LA Weekly may be distributed only by LA Weekly's authorized independent contractors or LA Weekly's authorized distributors. No person may, without prior written permission of LA Weekly, take more than one copy of each LA Weekly issue. For back-issue information call 310-574-7100. The entire contents of LA Weekly are Copyright 2014 by LA Weekly LP. No portion may be reproduced in whole or in part by any means, including electronic retrieval systems, without the express written permission of the publisher, LA Weekly, 724 S. Spring St., Los Angeles, CA 90015.
A chance to take a stand for immigrants and what’s decent, a kid’s cake decorating competition and farm-to-table community meal, panoramic paintings, and more to do and see in L.A. this week.

FEATURE
Out this month, more than a decade after the unapologetically violent comic series was published, Amazon Prime’s adaption of The Boys and its themes of the disenfranchised versus the 1 percent hits close to home in the age of Trump and #MeToo.

BY BRETT CALLWOOD.

EAT & DRINK
Italian subs may not be the food most associated with Los Angeles, but L.A.’s hold their own. Are you Team Godmother or Team Stepmother?

BY MICHELE STUEVEN.

ARTS
British composer and L.A. transplant Thomas Adès discusses his artistic mien and upcoming, AI machine-driven dance extravaganza with the L.A. Philharmonic at the Music Center.

BY SHANA NYS DAMBROT.

CULTURE
SLUSH: Local landmarks on the move, rent hikes and L.A. Weekly celebrates wins at the L.A. Press Club’s Southern California Journalism Awards.

BY ROY JURGENS.

FILM
NATHANIEL BELL explores the movies opening this week, including Stuber’s twist on the buddy cop formula.

MUSIC
L.A.-based darkwave/post-rock band ASHRR are off to a quick start after last year’s debut album, Oscillator.

BY BRETT CALLWOOD.
DANCE

Artificial Artistic Intelligence

In a normal week, an upcoming performance by England’s Royal Ballet, the bold Canadian violinist Leila Josefowicz or American pianist Kirill Gerstein would merit an individual preview for England’s Royal Ballet, the bold Canadian violinist Leila Josefowicz or American pianist Kirill Gerstein would merit an individual preview for England’s Royal Ballet, the bold Canadian violinist Leila Josefowicz or American pianist Kirill Gerstein would merit an individual preview for England’s Royal Ballet, the bold Canadian violinist Leila Josefowicz or American pianist Kirill Gerstein would merit an individual preview for England’s Royal Ballet, the bold Canadian violinist Leila Josefowicz or American pianist Kirill Gerstein would merit an individual preview for.

Adès & McGregor: A Dance Collaboration

Adès conducts his own music, including a new piece that features the Living Archive, an artificially intelligent system devised by McGregor for individual choreography that “is able to respond to any new movement phrase by suggesting multiple original possibilities for the next phrase.”

Take a Stand

From the safe vantage point of history, many people today brag about what they would have done to stop the Holocaust or prevent the systematic incarceration of more than 100,000 peaceful Japanese-American citizens in U.S. internment camps during World War II. Guess what? Now is another great time to stand up for human beings in need. As your government continues to separate immigrant children from their parents and cruelly confine them in literal cages, conscientious folk around the nation are gathering for Lights for Liberty: A Vigil to End Human Detention Camps. Sponsored by Code Pink and CHIRLA, the L.A. edition occurs fittingly enough outside Metropolitan Detention Center, the grim, forsaking, Death Star-like fortress of human misery operated by the Federal Bureau of Prisons. Metropolitan Detention Center, 353 Alameda St., downtown; Fri., July 12, 7-9 p.m.; free. facebook.com/events/451670135678048. —FALLING JAMES

FOOD & DRINK

Ace of Cakes

This afternoon’s Kid’s Cake Decorating Competition is less a battle royal than it is a win-win situation: You get to be a kid, you get to be a kid who gets to eat cake, and you get to decorate a cake you’re going to eat. Kids could be in a Gross Sandwich Eating Contest and they’d be perfectly happy — they’re kids. Food Network personality Duff Goldman — with Ace of Cakes star Geof Manthorne and other friends — give competing young’uns the ingredients they’ll need for an hour of pure joy decorating an incredible cake that’s all their own. Duff’s Cakemix, 165 S. De Lacey Ave., Pasadena; Sun., July 14, 1:30 p.m.; $107.72, (626) 249-0500, eventbrite.com/o/duffs-cake-mix-7496364785. —DAVID COTNER

Midnight in the Garden

Among the hidden gems among the beloved botanical landscapes at Descanso Gardens, the converted modern whitebox exhibition space of the Sturt Haaga Gallery is the most unexpected. Building on gallery programs dedicated to contemporary environmentally-themed visual art, they have also inaugurated an artist in residence program. Its first artist, the interdisciplinary practitioner Carole Kim, shows off the results of her onsite work of the last year, in Shine a Light, a presentation of digital prints on metal, projected videos, an installation in the windows of the space, and a larger-scale multimedia piece. That’s in the gallery. Outside throughout the gardens, Kim will stage more sculptural and video-based works and activate them with dance performances and live music throughout the summer and fall. Descanso Gardens, 1418 Descanso Drive, La Cañada Flintridge; opening reception: Sunday, July 13, 4-6 p.m.; on view through Oct. 27, 10 a.m.-4 p.m., daily; opening reception is free, visiting hours free with $9 garden admission. (818) 949-4200, descansogardens.org. —HANA MYI DAMBROIT

COMEDY

Dynamic Duo

Steve Martin and Martin Short are further proof that comedy greats come in twos. The actors met while filming 1986’s cult classic Three Amigos, followed by Father of the Bride and its sequel. For the last several years, the two have turned their friendship of more than 30 years into a live tour that mixes comedy bits, characters, childhood pictures, stories about their families and careers, musical interludes and a lot of friendly insults. “Steve and I are like Donny and Marie, but without the sexual tension,” Short joked in their 2018 Emmy-nominated special, Steve Martin and Martin Short: An Evening You Will Forget for the Rest of Your Life. For Steve Martin and Martin Short: Now You See Them, Soon You Won’t, Martin will again be accompanied by pianist Jeff Babko.
and Martin backed by his bluegrass band the Steep Canyon Rangers. We’re hoping Short once more resurrects his TV alter ego Jiminy Glick. We need the obnoxious fictional TV interviewer to tear Hollywood and our current administration new ones now more than ever. Greek Theatre, 2700 N. Vermont Ave., Griffith Park; Tue., July 16, 8 p.m.; $39.50-$225. (844) 524-7335, lagreektheatre.com. —SIRAN BABAYAN

DANCE

Star Crossed Lovers

Gustavo Dudamel conducts the L.A. Phil in the lush Serguéi Prokofiev ballet Romeo and Juliet with segments danced by members of the L.A. Dance Project. In the first installment last October at Disney Hall, Dudamel conducted, LADP artistic director Benjamin Millepied choreographed and filmed the dancers as they moved offstage and around parts of Disney Hall with the dancing streaming on screens in the theater. This time when the dancers move off the Bowl stage, the wandering about will have new and different possibilities. The video screens should provide fine viewing since beyond the first few top ticket sections, dance at the Bowl is viewable primarily on the video screens. As if R&J is not enough, the program also includes Dvořák’s Cello Concerto with cellist Pablo Ferrández. Hollywood Bowl, 2301 N. Highland Ave., Hollywood; Tue., July 16, 8 p.m.; $1-$168. hollywoodbowl.com. —ANN HAJKINS

WED 7/17

ART

The House of Japanese Folk Spirits

From the Japanese word for transformation comes a new exhibition at Japan House exploring the liminal intersections between folkloric traditions across both the globe and the digital divide, ordinary life and dimensions beyond, and the power of spirits to transform our lives and even our physical selves. BAKERU: Transforming Spirits generates both performative and participatory experiences, informed on one hand by old-school folk festival and its colorful, evocative, ritualized artistry, and on the other by WOW studio’s technology-enhanced flights of interactive fancy. Opening night features a spectacular convolution performance of the traditional Deer Dance, followed by an intimate folk-experts symposium and tour of the costumes that are part of the exhibition. Japan House (2nd floor), 6801 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood; opening night performance: Thu., July 17, 7-8:30 p.m.; on view through Oct. 6, Mon.-Sat., 10 a.m.-8 p.m. & Sun., 10 a.m.-7 p.m.; free. (323) 467-7718, japanhouse.com. —SHANA NYS DAMBROT

THU 7/17

COMEDY

Festival of Laughs

With Riot L.A. Comedy Festival, Funny or Die’s Oddball Comedy & Curiosity Festival, and Jack Black and Kyle Gass’ Festival Supreme absent the last few years, the inaugural 2019 Silver Lake Comedy Festival might one day become L.A.’s biggest comedy gathering. Hosted by Comedy Cube, which organizes comedy events in various cities and matches comedians with non-profit organizations, the nearly dozen names in the lineup feature headliner Mary Lynn Rajskub, as well as Thomas Dale, Jesus Trejo, Vince Caldera, Moses Storm, Lizzy Cooperman, Kiran Deol, Cisco Duran, Richy Les and Kimberly Clark, whose combined credits include NBC, HBO, Comedy Central and Netflix. They’ll be performing on both El Cic’s indoor and outdoor stages, and partial proceeds from ticket sales will benefit various local nonprofits, namely the YWCA Glendale Women’s and Children’s Shelter, Glendale Arts, Homeless Health Care Los Angeles and others. El Cic, 4212 Sunset Blvd., Silver Lake; Thu., July 17, 7-9 p.m.; $20-$180. (323) 668-0318, comiccurve.com. —LINA LECARO subject matter and graphic imagery. Otherwise, as fans of the book and show the task of adapting one of Ennis' properties, a writer who will gleefully push boundaries and by fans of the medium. Ennis is known to be a Garth Ennis comic book, a title that is beloved on the floor, much like Hughie's girlfriend. It's otherwise shocking. The viewer is left with their jaw severed arms. covered in blood and holding a pair of any punches.

As introductions to a new show go, it's pret-

The Boys series was published, Amazon Prime's adaption of but the first episode of to avoid spoilers here, we're going to try our best.

The story takes place in a world where su-

The Boys kicks off a Garth Ennis comic book, a title that is beloved beautiful paced and shot, and we're left in no by fans of the medium. Ennis is known to be a superhero moving at superspeed literally going, yada, yada. Then, without warning, couldn't be more normal — when will they face is more important to The Seven and Vought G-Men, but The Seven are the most power-

The Boys (there are other teams, such as the conventional relationship day-to-day events but none of the morals and innate goodness. The Seven (there are other teams, such as the)

The Boys and allegories. That's why making money and saving to society, offering warnings to superheroes exist, but they are not the idealistic a reason. As with a lot of Ennis' characters that Marvel, and especially DC, have made into a TV show, I was generally rotten to the core. For that reason, a denial and its themes of the disenfranchised versus the 1 percent hit

The Boyszon has done a grand job with writers, and even streaming service such as Amazon is much bet-

The BoysPreacher was sardonic and cynical, the Ben Stiller movie goofy and zany. But the feeling now is that a

Boys to somebody else, be-

Boys Preacher just wanted to say fuck you for giving down, and he said 'What's up?' And I said, 'Oh I cause I'm the world's biggest fan of

Boys to somebody else, be-

Boys Preacher just wanted to say fuck you for giving down, and he said 'What's up?' And I said, 'Oh I cause I'm the world's biggest fan of

Boys to somebody else, be-

Boys Preacher just wanted to say fuck you for giving down, and he said 'What's up?' And I said, 'Oh I cause I'm the world's biggest fan of

Boys to somebody else, be-

Boys Preacher just wanted to say fuck you for giving down, and he said 'What's up?' And I said, 'Oh I cause I'm the world's biggest fan of

Boys to somebody else, be-

Boys Preacher just wanted to say fuck you for giving down, and he said 'What's up?' And I said, 'Oh I cause I'm the world's biggest fan of
LET’S HEAR IT FOR THE BOYS

More than a decade after the unapologetically violent comic series was published, Amazon Prime’s adaption of The Boys and its themes of the disenfranchised versus the 1 percent hit close to home in the age of Trump and #MeToo.

BY BRETT CALLWOOD

We’re going to try our best to avoid spoilers here, but the first episode of new Amazon Prime series The Boys kicks off with the character Hughie Campbell (played by Jack Quaid) going through some fairly conventional relationship day-to-day events and conversations with his girlfriend. It couldn’t be more normal — when will they move in together, where are their careers going, yada, yada. Then, without warning, a superhero moving at superspeed literally runs through the woman leaving Campbell covered in blood and holding a pair of severed arms.

As introductions to a new show go, it’s pretty shocking. The viewer is left with their jaw down, and we’re left in no doubt that this is a show that won’t be pulling any punches.

That’s important, because The Boys is based on a Garth Ennis comic book, a title that is beloved by fans of the medium. Ennis is known to be a writer who will gleefully push boundaries and leap over the line of good taste. When taking on the task of adapting one of Ennis’ properties, as fans of the book and show Preacher already know, a studio has to be ready to tackle extreme subject matter and graphic imagery. Otherwise, fans will be displeased. The great news is, Amazon has done a grand job with The Boys.

The story takes place in a world where superheroes exist, but they are not the idealistic characters that Marvel, and especially DC, have given us. The Homelander, for example, is a twisted parody of Superman — a guy with a similar backstory and uber-patriotic costume, but none of the morals and innate goodness. Similarly, Queen Maeve is a troubled version of Wonder Woman, A-Train (he of that opening scene) a deeply flawed Flash, The Deep a particularly awful Aquaman, and so it goes on.

They’re grouped together as a team called The Seven (there are other teams, such as the G-Men, but The Seven are the most powerful), controlled by a massive corporation called Vought-American. Making money and saving face is more important to The Seven and Vought than actually doing good. Superheroing is a capitalist endeavor, and the people doing it are generally rotten to the core. For that reason, a small group of operatives called The Boys, led by Billy Butcher, are formed in an attempt to keep the superheroes in check. That’s the basic story. A rag-tag gang against rich superheroes. Chaos ensues.

The book is fairly extreme. Not quite as gnarly as another Ennis title, Crossed, but hardcore nonetheless. Themes of torture and sexual violence are explored unflinchingly. This isn’t a kids comic. But it’s all there for a reason. As with a lot of Ennis’ work, he’s holding up a mirror to society, offering warnings and allegories. That’s why The Boys would have been such a challenge to take on, though having seen the first three episodes, we can confirm that Amazon have done an admirable job. Eric Kripke, creator of Supernatural, is the guy who took on the task of adapting the comic book, alongside co-creators Evan Goldberg and Seth Rogen.

“When it was announced that Preacher was going to be made into a TV show, I was friendly with one of the producers and I started meeting with him, for no other reason than to say ‘Fuck you for giving Preacher to somebody else, because I’m the world’s biggest fan of Preacher’,” Kripke says. “So I went into the meeting and sat down, and he said ‘What’s up?’ And I said, ‘Oh I just wanted to say fuck you for giving Preacher to somebody else.’ And he said, ‘Oh, we have The Boys — do you want that?’ And I said, ‘Total;’ Seth and Evan were getting involved with it too, because they were also producing Preacher, then we all just sort of got together and started kicking around ideas, and took it from there.”

Because he was a fan of the book before getting to work on the series, Kripke had a strong understanding of the source material — and what could and couldn’t be changed while retaining the spirit created by Ennis and artist Darick Robertson.

“It was certainly important not to water it down and to capture the tone of what Garth did,” Kripke says. “That tone can be really shocking and insane. But I think the best way to do it so you can have a show that is edgy and takes a lot of risks but also isn’t just gratuitous or shock for shock’s sake, which I think is another danger, I think you have to be very careful about making sure all the insane moments really further the story and the character. So there are certain moments in the books that we are doing, and there are certain moments in the books that we’re not. It’s not really because they’re too far — I don’t think anything’s too far. It’s just a question of whether it’s the best thing for the characters or does it advance the story.”
so Amazon brought him in to play Hughie’s well over 6-foot. What makes him work is terrific as Hughie, is definitely not ‘wee. ’ He’s there. It’s funny because Jack Quaid, who’s “At the same time, with /The Boys, the aesthetics being respected and brought to screen, especially because it was on Amazon with the streaming thing, they were really able to pull the gloves off and it’s a hard-hitting show. “Despite all of the carnage we witness in the pages and on the screen, Kripyke is convinced that the story Ennis wrote is a very sweet one that hinges on relationships, either romantic or close friendships, working, or even adversarial. “I think the relationship between Butcher and Hughie is really interesting and sweet, I think Frenchie and Female [two more of /The Boys] have a really interesting relationship, Hughie and Starlight [a new, female member of The Seven who has a terrible time trying to fit in] have a sweet relationship — I really like that kind of storytelling, that’s right up my alley. Having something that has a lot of heart and emotion, and then you just hang all sorts of blood and violence and perversity on top of it. But I think the core is really solid, and I think that’s in the books. I think Garth wrote a really sweet story in a weird way, and just wallpapered a lot of perversity on top. I think we’re capturing that.” Wallpapering perversity on top of sweetness — that’s a great way to describe Ennis and Robertson’s world. Aesthetically, Robertson believes that Kripyke and the team at Amazon have done a great job of retaining that vibe. “They’ve done their own thing for the most part, but you can really see my costume designs being respected and brought to screen, especially when it comes to the Seven,” Robertson says. “At the same time, with /The Boys, the aesthetics are there. It’s funny because Jack Quaid, who’s terrific as Hughie, is definitely not ‘wee. ’ He’s well over 6-foot. What makes him work is all there — the T-shirts they put on him, and his personality really comes through.” When Robertson originally drew the character of Wee Hughie Campbell back in 2006, he based his appearance directly off of the actor Simon Pegg, so much so that fans had pretty much cast Pegg as Campbell before the show had been given a green light. Unfortunately, Pegg had gotten too old to play the character, so Amazon brought him in to play Hughie’s dad. It’s a rare case of a studio really paying attention to what the fans want. “Simon never played Hughie before, but everyone just assumes that Simon Pegg is Hughie because for so many years he was drawn as that part,” Kripyke says. “I had read an interview, and Simon said that he’s starting to get too old to play Hughie but he’d love to play his dad. So when the show was greenlit, I had my casting director reach out to Simon Pegg and say, ‘If you were serious about that, there is the role of Hughie’s dad and it’s yours if you want it.’ To his incredible credit, he took it. He was super busy — he was touring the world doing press for Mission Impossible, he had a lot going on. It’s more than a cameo — it’s a real character. It was really good of him, it really shows how much he cares about the fans.”

Castng the show would have been no easy task. The producers had to cast the superheroes months before /The Boys, because their costumes had to be specially made and it takes forever. So Erin Moriarty as Annie January/Starlight was first, then Antony Starr as Homelander. Once The Seven was assembled, Karl Urban (known to comic book fans as the star of Dredd) was quickly cast as Billy Butcher. “The producer of the show reached out and asked me if it was something that I would be interested in,” Urban says. “I said I was interested, so they sent me the pilot. I read it and immediately responded, not only to the character of Billy Butcher who is this wonderfully roguish, Machiavellian scoundrel, but then also to the story at large. I felt that it was wonderful storytelling, great characters, and it felt like the show operates on a multitude of different levels. It’s fun, exciting, shocking, entertaining, but it also makes a poignant comment on a lot of social, societal and political issues.”

Slightly dodgy cockney accent aside, New Zealander Urban is great as Butcher, but then the entire show is beautifully cast. Elisabeth Shue, for example, is tremendous as the delightfully evil Vought boss Madelyn Stillwell (a gender-swap from the book, where the character is called James Stillwell). Interestingly, there are characters in the book that didn’t make the series, such as the alien Jack from Jupiter, an obvious twist on DC’s Martian Manhunter. “He’s not there, but I actually see what they did with the show,” Robertson says. “They combined his character with The Deep, who was never that interesting in the comics — we kind of had him there as a joke. The Deep in the TV show seems to have a lot more of Jack from Jupiter’s personality. Everything they’ve done, everything they’ve tweaked, I feel is very respectful, and at the same time, I recognize that they’re doing their own show. You have to accept the fact that it’s an adaptation. It’s not going to be verbatim your comic book brought to screen — that just wouldn’t work.”

Ennis agrees, telling us by email that, “I think they’ve more or less gotten the spirit right, and from that all else flows . . . I’m content to let the book be the book and the show the show. There’ll always be things you just can’t put on TV”.

Urban believes that much of what Ennis and Robertson put in the comics wouldn’t be appropriate for a TV show, any TV show. “The comic books are the starting point,” the actor says. “But there are many subtle differences. For example, in the comic books /The Boys have some sort of super abilities themselves because they’ve ingested Compound V. Well, in the show we don’t because Eric Kripyke was adamant that what really interested him was presenting a vision of the absolute powerless taking on the most powerful. So you’ve got these blue collar working criminals, subculture fringe of society types, taking on the most elite group, the 1 percent of the 1 percent corporate wealthiest superpowered people in the world. To me, that's a fascinating challenge."

Urban is right. And in 2019, The Boys is as topical and "current" as it was when it was written. Perhaps more so. It benefits from the fact that it wasn't adapted into a movie a decade ago for a number of reasons: 1) Superhero movies and TV shows are all over the place now, and the non-comic reading audience has more points of reference, and 2) in the light of the Trump presidency, the #MeToo movement and other social and political events, the narrative makes more sense. It's almost prophetic.

"Garth Ennis and I had a very different approach to superheroes, and different feelings towards them when we came together to work," Robertson says. "His comics were like war comics, Beano and 2000 AD. That shaped his love of comics, so the Marvel and DC superheroes seem kind of silly to him. When it came time to do The Boys, I didn't have any problem parodying them because what I saw very clearly is how the Homelander isn't Superman. How Queen Maeve isn't Wonder Woman. What's really important to me is that, anybody can put on a superhero costume, but that doesn't make you Superman. Superman is about the man inside — his character. When you see Homeland, and he has no moral center, it makes it very clear that you're not watching the DC universe."

As Amazon prepares to drop The Boys on July 26, it remains to be seen how well it will be received. Ennis' Preacher did fairly well, and The Boys does have a fairly rabid fanbase. Whether that all turns into a sizable TV audience — that's the big question.

"How do you cut through the clutter of 10,000 really good shows," says Kripke. "Amazon's done a hell of a job marketing it, and I'm hopeful that way the world has changed in that short time," Robertson says. "The world of media has really opened up for the kind of thing they can do on a streaming service and a series, it's so much more suited to something like The Boys than a movie franchise even could be because you've got to consolidate so much into a two hour story, whereas this is a very rich world that Garth Ennis and I created and you can really explore individual characters. There are so many ways you can go, now that it's got room to open up and breathe, and break down into hour long episodes."

The Boys is available for streaming on Amazon Prime from July 26. Read Garth Ennis and Derick Robertson's comic books, available now through Dynamite Entertainment.
COMING SOON:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Date</th>
<th>Event</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>7/13</td>
<td>SWEET SATURDAYS - SONIDO LATINO - LOVE SESSION</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/16</td>
<td>THE MOTH: BACKFIRED</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/16</td>
<td>THE CHASM / CRUCIAMENTUM / INFERNAL CONJURATION / TRANSTORNO</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/18</td>
<td>WIFISFUNERAL - WITH GUESTS SADF ACETHUGGIN &amp; CAMP YOLA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/18</td>
<td>REGGAE THURSDAYS THE SUMMER SERIES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/19</td>
<td>SONS OF SATAN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/19</td>
<td>WAREHOUSE LA PRESENTS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/19</td>
<td>CLUB 90’S PRESENTS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/20</td>
<td>ARTHELUV</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/24</td>
<td>THE R&amp;B LOUNGE PRESENTS &quot;THIS IS HOW WE DO IT&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/25</td>
<td>REGGAE THURSDAYS THE SUMMER SERIES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/26</td>
<td>FRIENDS WITH BENEFITS: R&amp;B PARTY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/26</td>
<td>CLUB 90’S PRESENTS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/27</td>
<td>CREW LOVE PARTY LA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/27</td>
<td>DILF JOCK / UNDERWEAR PARTY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/27</td>
<td>SONS OF SATAN</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/27</td>
<td>KEBEBO! LA’S MONTHLY HABESHA TURN UP PARTY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/27</td>
<td>REGGAE THURSDAYS &quot;THIS IS HOW WE DO IT&quot;</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/28</td>
<td>THE R&amp;B LOUNGE PRESENTS THE SUMMER SERIES</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/28</td>
<td>FRIENDS WITH BENEFITS: R&amp;B PARTY</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/28</td>
<td>CLUB 90’S PRESENTS</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/28</td>
<td>CREW LOVE PARTY LA</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>7/28</td>
<td>DILF JOCK / UNDERWEAR PARTY</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

---

Unlocked House

Salsa Fuego

Sat. July 13

Afro Gogo - “The African Fiesta” (Afrobeats & More)

---

KITCHEN OPEN TILL 1AM DAILY

KARAOKE NIGHTLY 8PM

Boardwalk11.com

10433 National Blvd, Culver City

---

30 CRAFT ON TAP

Free Parking

---

Contact:

3040 W. Sunset Blvd, Los Angeles, CA 90026
(323) 666-6669
Tickets & Info at clublosglobos.com facebook.com/clublosglobos twitter.com/clublosglobos
@clublosglobos
When it comes to Italian sandwiches, are you Team Godmother or Team Stepmother?

BY MICHELE STUEVEN

In a generation where Subway sandwiches are to Italian subs what Chipotle is to burritos, it’s time for a sit down to revisit L.A.’s grandaddy of them all, the Godmother at Bay Cities in Santa Monica, and get a taste of The Stepmother, Zach Pollack’s homage to the hoagie at Cosa Buona in Echo Park.

According to Bay Cities general manager Hector Padilla, whose family owns the deli that opened in 1925, the iconic sub has been around since the ‘50s and is named the Godmother because in Italian lore, that’s who feeds the family.

From the bottom up, the Godmother starts with Italian prosciutto, ham, capicola, mortadella, Genoa salami and provolone cheese topped with the works — mild in-house roasted bell peppers or spicy giardiniera, tomatoes, iceberg lettuce, mayo and yellow mustard on bread that’s baked fresh on site daily.

The order of construction is crucial to preventing sogginess and maintaining proper containment of the juicy ingredients which still inevitably drip down your arm.

Other local restaurants have tried to copy the original under dubious circumstances, including one on Melrose whose owner caused a scene in Bay Cities when Padilla invoked the omertà oath, refusing to disclose certain family secrets.

But Pollack, who grew up on the Westside on a steady diet of Godmothers, pays homage to the original with a respectful and delicious close second on the other side of town.

“This is my version of the Godmother,” says Pollack, formerly of Sotto and who also owns nearby Alimento in Silver Lake. “It’s not supposed to be something that dethrones the Godmother or something that tries to be close to the original with a respectful and delicious close second on the other side of town.

“From our house we would smell the bread everyday between 4 p.m. and 6 p.m., when they were baking the French bread. The sour dough was baked in the middle of the night.”

Cosa Buona has a combi oven instead of a steam oven, which creates a more bready crust on the Godmother. “In this ciabatta there’s no whole wheat,” Pollack tells L.A. Weekly from his old school sit-down Italian haunt at the corner of Sunset Boulevard and Alvarado. “We use organic flours that are artisanal-milled, but we’re not going for that rustic loaf for this type of sandwich. Since we make our own pizza dough and focaccia, making the bread was not a big leap.”

While both mothers are as close to sisters as you can get, only the home surroundings are the real striking differences. And as imitation is the greatest form of flattery, Padilla enjoys a little friendly cross-town competition.

“I have respect for Zach because he’s not going out to media outlets saying he’s competing with us,” says Padilla.

“I’m going to have to go into Cosa Buona and try their pizza. That’s the one thing we don’t make here. If we’re not great at something, why do it? Let somebody else do it.”
THE INJECTING SPECIALISTS

LA’S MOST CELEBRATED & FRIENDLY INJECTORS

‘THIS WEEK’S SPECIALS!’

JULY 11TH - JULY 17TH, 2019

|$100 OFF TRIO|

PURCHASE 24+ UNITS OF BOTOX AT $8.95 PER UNIT & SAVE BIG ON JUVÉDERM

EARN LOYALTY POINTS TOWARDS YOUR NEXT TREATMENT VISIT OURBEAUTY.COM OR CALL FOR MINIMAL RESTRICTIONS

$200 OFF PURCHASE 24+ UNITS OF BOTOX AT $130 OFF VISIT OUBEAUTY.COM OR CALL FOR MINIMAL RESTRICTIONS PER VIAL

PURCHASE 60+ UNITS OF DYSPORT AT $2.95

SPECIALISTS

COOLSCULPTING HANDLES

NO DOWNTIME PERMANENTLY

RECOMMENDED 1-3 VIALS FOR FIRST TREATMENT AND 1-2 FOR SECOND.

NOW $200 OFF PER VIAL

$195

FREE AFTER-CARE KIT

30-DAY SUPPLY NO EXAM FEE

LIGHT SHEER JULY SPECIALS 60% OFF UNTIL 7/31/19

THE WEEKLY TO ADVERTISE IN CLINICAL TRIALS CALL 310.574.7314

ARE YOU READY TO MAKE A CHANGE?

Seeking people who are motivated to quit or reduce their drinking for a 16-week clinical trial of a new medication (ibudilost)

Take control of your drinking Up to $325 compensation

310-206-6756

LA WEEKLY
Surrealism, or how avant-garde composer Thomas Adès made a muse of Los Angeles

BY SHANA NYS DAMBROT

Something special is happening at the Music Center this weekend, as Adès & McGregor: A Dance Collaboration engineers an interdisciplinary mini-festival of works by Thomas Adès. The British composer will be conducting the L.A. Phil in his own compositions and Wayne McGregor Company and the British Royal Ballet will be performing works by McGregor and his new AI machine — all backed by visual and costume design from noted artist Tacita Dean and a video installation by designer Ben Cullen Williams, the latter inspired by McGregor’s computer.

This is far from the first important work by Adès presented in Los Angeles; though a Brit, he has called this town his second home for over a decade — since 2008 when the L.A. Phil first commissioned the seven-movement orchestral work In Seven Days, which is the piece (Living Archive: An AI Performance Experiment) whose new choreography and sculptural video facet both respond to the algorithm. The Royal Ballet’s principal dancer, Ed Watson, portrays Dante.

The other major work this weekend will be Inferno, the first movement of a new Divine Comedy which in its multilayered scope and ambitions of visual art and spectacle present a unique set of more analog challenges. When L.A. Weekly caught up with Adès, he had just come from a rehearsal (more of a tech scout really). “Sorry to be a bit late!” he says in his posh deep-toned accent. “We were having trouble figuring out how to fit every drum in Los Angeles onto the stage.”

We spoke while he was driven back to his home in the Hollywood Hills, a casually chic retro-modernist treehouse he bought not long after realizing that he was destined to be an Angeleno, at least some of the time, forever. In 2008, when In Seven Days was originally commissioned, Adès had first spent time here in a serious way. He had come here to write and collaborate on the “video ballet” portion of the work, and fell in love with the city.

When he arrived, Betty Freeman (the noted philanthropist and music patron who passed away in 2009 at the age of 87) showed him around. “She set out to seduce me with the city, and she succeeded,” Adès says. “The first person she took me to see was Hockney. Since then my relationship to L.A. has changed — and deepened. The beauty and the glam are all still there, of course, but it’s mellowed into more of a David Lynch thing. I think about Mulholland to the classic surrealist scene, its patterns of thought are indelible. “I see reality in a funny way,” he says. “Like that it isn’t there. Surrealism is a space of unspoken connections, forbidden connections. Dance itself can be so shocking, wicked, scary. In the end it comes to this: What is reality? I think all my work tries to answer that question.”

And to his mind, Los Angeles, per Lynch, is a quintessentially surreal city — strange, and not what it seems on the surface. He appreciates that it has a Gothic side, extraordinary characters, and the legacy of writers like Chandler, Fante and Ellroy. “And there’s this other intangible thing among filmmakers, writers, artists. It feels like the Divine Comedy. The continuum of Limbo and into the first levels of the underworld, this feels like my own experience here,” he says. “The juxtaposition of sunshine and darkness, it’s a delicious place, a joyful place, but with a kind of darkness at the heart.”

According to Adès, the 14th-century text by Dante is really about states of existence, an allegory with a way to read it psychoanalytically, and he sees this production as “an opportunity to reconsider the text, for modern people, to let them know this is about their life right now, literally today, this morning.”

Inferno premiered at Disney Hall conducted by Dudamel in May. It is the first act which along with Purgatory and Paradise will comprise a full Divine Comedy, commissioned by L.A. Phil and The Royal Ballet to debut in London in May 2020. For this L.A. advance, Inferno’s stage backdrop will be a monumental drawing by Dean, for what will become a built set in London. No word yet on how this interacts with the proliferating percussionist situation. As of this writing, Adès is confidently awaiting their creative solution to the fact that the orchestra in no way fits in the pit at Dorothy Chandler. It will involve spillage and maybe scaffolding; that has happened before. It seems Adès has a penchant for bells, a big deep bass gong or three, tympanies, whips, rattles, and spatulas. It takes up room.

“Music is visual, and dance is the most obvious, but not the only, manifestation of that,” he says. “Videos, like dance, can be organic, integrated as part of the music, in the same way as the dancer and the dance.” As a general matter, the L.A. Phil “gets it,” he says. “They offer complete freedom to do what you want to your full capacity.” It’s no wonder Adès likes working here.

“Dante puts things in the wrong place, to unlock the keys to the unknowable. Even in the happy bits like Paradise, you cannot feel time. It’s uncanny, eerie, spooky. My music is like that I think. Weirdness, perversity, deviance.” Perhaps this very weirdness is what attracts his fans as new audiences to the classical genre. “I had more than one beloved mentor say my work was ‘in slightly poor taste.’ I knew I was onto something.”

For more information: musiccenter.org/adesmcgregor; thomasades.com; waynemcgregor.com/about/wayne-mcgregor/
CULTURE: SLUSH

LANDMARKS ON THE MOVE

Also, renters take a hike, LASD struggles with cliques and two of the Weekly’s own take home prizes

BY ROY JURGENS

The rotating Happy Foot/Sad Foot sign in Silver Lake has attained legendary status over the 40 years it has spun over Sunset Boulevard. It has influenced literary works by Jonathan Lethem and David Foster Wallace, as well as the music of Beck and Mark Oliver Everett (aka E, Eels). More importantly, however, is its role in guiding the daily lives of locals who reside within in its shadow.

For those who don’t know, the two-sided sign above the Sunset Foot Clinic on West Sunset depicts a sad injured foot on one side and a happy foot healthy foot on the other. Depending upon which side they see, people decide whether to have fun or go to work, whether to stay in or go out, whether to do homework or to blow it off… you get the idea.

Come September, the iconic sign will be leaving its present home and heading toward Rampart Village, where it will undoubtedly lord over its townfolk like a vengeful tyrant. The abandoned citizens of Silver Lake will have no choice but to find another talisman by which to make major life decisions.

Another longtime L.A. landmark, Nick’s Metropolis, which was sprawled along the corner of La Brea and First Street, has finally shuttered after 27 years on the spot. The eclectic store was a magnet for celebs, prop masters, collectors and just about anyone who enjoying rooting through a pie of cool junk. Thankfully, Nick’s vision has been re-born at his new location, 1846 West Adams Blvd, where all your favorite tchotchkes will be available for perusal and purchase.

RENTERS TO TAKE A HIKE

In a blow to Los Angeles renters, landlords will be able to raise rents by 4 percent for the first time in a decade. With an increase in the Consumer Price Index, over 600,000 rent controlled units will face even more of a rent hike this year, further stressing a rental environment where many people are paying more than half their income for housing while being pushed to the brink of homelessness.

In a related issue, one has to laud California state Assemblyman David Chiu’s moxie. While his bill, AB 1482, which capped rent increases statewide at 7 percent plus infla-

EAGLES AND LIONS IN SANTA MONICA, OH MY!

Amid the urban jungle of Los Angeles, we tend to forget that we have a bounty of natural spaces within our midst. Those natural spaces have been a source of good news lately. For the first time in 30 years, golden eagle chicks have been seen in the Santa Monica Mountains. National Park service personnel confirmed the sighting of two healthy chicks back in May, and took blood samples and banded the parents. Golden eagles are a close relative to the bald eagles, and are very rarely seen.

It looks as though we have a new feline friend as well. P-75, as she has come to be known, was spotted up a tree in Pacific Palisades. State wildlife officials tranquilized, diagnosed, tagged, and collared the 50-pound female with a GPS device before releasing her deep into the Santa Monica mountains. She is the 10th local mountain lion currently being tracked and studied.

L.A. WEEKLY WINS AT SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA JOURNALISM AWARDS

And finally, we’d be remiss if we didn’t tout our own horn once in a while. Two of our very own, Shana Nys Dambrot and Lina Lecaro, were up for 2019 Southern California Journalism Awards at the 61st annual Los Angeles Press Club gala held at the Millennium Biltmore Hotel downtown on June 30. Dambrot took first prize for her feature on actor Viggo Mortensen while Lecaro won third prize for her work in overall print journalism. Congratulations to both of these hard-working, talented women.
FILM

A BUDDY COP FLICK FOR THE UBER AGE

Dave Bautista stars in twist on classic film formula and an apocalyptic film returns

BY NATHANIEL BELL

Welcome to L.A. Weekly’s Movie Guide, your look at the hottest films in Los Angeles theaters this week — from indie art house gems and classics to popcorn-perfect blockbusters and new movies garnering buzz. Check here every week before you make your big screen plans.

Opening Wide

Stuber is a juicy vehicle for Dave Bautista, the wrestler-turned-international-movie-star. He plays a gruff LAPD detective who enlists the help of a mild-mannered Uber driver (Kumail Nanjiani) to track a vicious terrorist (Iko Uwais). A classic buddy movie setup gives way to some manic, R-rated action. Michael Dowse directed an original screenplay by Tripper Clancy.

Limited/art-house

Friday, July 12

A timid accountant is attacked by a motorcycle gang and joins a karate class to build up his self-esteem. That's the spare premise of The Art of Self-Defense, an outré comedy starring Jesse Eisenberg, Alessandro Novella and Imogen Poots. The clandestine world of martial arts is the playground on which writer-director Riley Stearns toys with ideas about masculine aggression. The deadpan, geometric camerawork augments the droll line deliveries of this offbeat indie. ArcLight, 6360 Sunset Blvd., Hollywood, Fri., July 12, various showtimes; $16-$18; (323) 615-2550, arclightcinemas.com.

Darlin’ refers to a feral teenager (Lauryn Cann), caked in mud and ravenous, discovered by the members of a Catholic hospital. Her yen for raw meat weirds out the staff, but she’s successfully domesticized... until her kith and kin come looking for her. The Walking Dead star Pollyanna McIntosh makes her directorial debut from her screenplay. McIntosh also has a pivotal role in front of the camera. The project is a cult classic about an ordinary man (Anthony Edwards) who overhears a phone call confirming an impending nuclear strike. Writer-director Steve De Jarnatt constructs this tightly-woven narrative according to the three classical unities (action, place, and time), and as much a love letter to Los Angeles as it is a slow-burning apocalyptic thriller. In honor of the film’s 30th anniversary, UCLA has curated an evening that will include a Q&A with De Jarnatt following a 35mm presentation. UCLA’s Billy Wilder Theater, 10899 Wilshire Blvd., Westwood, Sun., July 14, 7 p.m.; $10. (310) 206-8013, cinema.ucla.edu.

Three Peaks is a somber Italian-German drama about a man (Alexander Fehling) and his girlfriend (Bérénice Bejo) attempting to make a life together with her young son (Arian Montgomery). While on vacation in the Dolomites, the boy disappears and the frantic search instigates a dark night of the soul for the couple. Director Jan Zabeil handles this material with nuance and sensitivity, leading to an affecting climax. NuArt Theatre, 11272 Santa Monica Blvd., Sawtelle; Fri., July 12, various showtimes; $9-$12. (310) 473-8530, landmarktheatres.com.

Catch a Thrill! is a series designed to celebrate the 10th anniversary of the American Genre Film Archive, an Austin-based collection of grindhouse features, trailers and neo-classics. UCLA’s seven-night screening series kicks off with Don’t Panic (aka Dimensiones ocultus), boldly billed as “the greatest movie you’ve never seen.” This cheapo 1989 Mexican horror flick features a teenager who summons a demon from hell and spends most of the runtime fleeing in a pair of dinosaur pajamas. Joe Ziemba, Sebastian del Castillo, Alicia Coombs, and Bret Berg of AGFA will be joined by Shock Waves podcasters Rebekah McKenzie, Robert Galluzzo, and Elric Kane. UCLA’s Billy Wilder Theater, 10899 Wilshire Blvd., Westwood; Fri., July 12, 7:30 p.m.; $10. (310) 206-8013, cinema.ucla.edu.

Sunday, July 14

Armenian-Canadian animator and experimental filmmaker Gariné Torossian will visit LA Filmforum for her first Los Angeles retrospective. Many of her highly mediated 16mm works, which span a period of 25 years, explore notions of national identity and memory in a richly poetic montage style. The program is titled Gariné Torossian: More than Strictly Visible Things. Spielberg Theatre at the Egyptian, 6712 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood; Sun., July 12, 7:30 p.m.; $10. (323) 466-3456, lafilmforum.org.

Miracle Mile is a cult classic about an ordinary man (Anthony Edwards) who overhears a phone call confirming an impending nuclear strike. Writer-director Steve De Jarnatt constructs this tightly-woven narrative according to the three classical unities (action, place, and time), and as much a love letter to Los Angeles as it is a slow-burning apocalyptic thriller. In honor of the film’s 30th anniversary, UCLA has curated an evening that will include a Q&A with De Jarnatt following a 35mm presentation. UCLA’s Billy Wilder Theater, 10899 Wilshire Blvd., Westwood, Sun., July 14, 7 p.m.; $10. (310) 206-8013, cinema.ucla.edu.

Joe Dante is a national treasure — a filmmaker of considerable wit who crafts trenchant social satires from the most entertaining elements of popular culture. Gremlins is a sharply funny teen horror comedy written by Chris Columbus and produced by Steven Spielberg about a cute critter that spawns a spate of devilish creatures that proceed to wreak havoc in an all-American town. A holiday classic too good to be watched only at Christmastime, the film will receive a special 35th anniversary matinee screening courtesy of Laemmle, followed by a Q&A with Dante. Laemmle Ahrya Fine Arts Theatre, 8556 Wilshire Blvd., Beverly Hills, Sun., July 12, 3 p.m.; $15. (310) 478-3836, laemmle.com.

Behavioral Research Specialists, LLC

Paid Participation Available

Depression - Anxiety - Bipolar - Schizophrenia - Pain - Alzheimer’s
Opiate Addiction - Diabetes - Insomnia - Asthma - ADHD - Hypertension
High Cholesterol - Inpatient- Phase I-IV - Pediatrics - PTSD - Restless Leg

230 N. Maryland Ave.
Suite 207, Glendale, CA 91206
888-255-5798 Ext. 1
www.brstrials.com
info@brstrials.com

OWN THE BLU-RAY 7/16 AND THE DIGITAL MOVIE NOW

SHAZAM!

Scan for a Behind-the-Scenes Look

© 2019 WB PICTURES • DC COMICS
The debuting trio, ASHRR, combines disparate influences for a uniquely beautiful sound that is getting impossible to ignore. Their debut album, released a new single, a cover of Siouxsie and the Banshees’ “Cities of Dust.” Meaningful and the Clash, and moodier elements such as Radiohead, Nine Inch Nails, LCD Soundsystem and The Clash, and moodier elements such as hybrid came out of it. “That was sort of our goal — to create a sound that isn’t really like anything we know,” says Allen.

“We liked the idea of a female singer, a powerful singer like Siouxsie, and then interpreting it with a male singer, which changes everything it was pertinent to what was going on in the world today.”

Ethan and I have a great love of analog synths, says Allen. “We'll have to see if they're combustible enough yet.”

That weird band name is derived from David Bowie, experimentation of Brian Eno and the Talking Heads, that sort of thing. “It kind of grew up in Austin before moving to New Orleans — Charles came y'know, cooled it up a bit.”

The three members are all from different places — Charles came from the east coast and preparing new material for release. “We kind of all got along really well in a way that there was almost a brotherhood of men.”

“We had a shared, common interest in just trying to make a band for today, but obviously we have that isn’t really like anything we know.”

Fellow producer and vocalist Ethan Allen says that the three didn’t initially assemble with the concern — if we really liked it, we were gonna...

“We just all love the song, felt that it was very appealing to us, but also Siouxsie all those things, and an interesting, unlooked-for real homage to what was so good about the spirit of the original.”

After this show, they have another one lined up. “There’s always this underlying feeling of un-easiness, even in the beauty of it,” says Charles.

“Those are all things we’re very interested in. We also wanted very to have a pop sensibility. Those are all things an element of threat to it, but also managed to find a way to make that work and viable,” adds Charles.

“We had a shared, common interest in just trying to make a band for today, but obviously we have that isn’t really like anything we know.”

They just, y’know, cooled it up a bit. “This week, they perform at the Resident, and then, they'll be touring the West Coast and preparing new material for release.”
The debuting trio drawn from all corners of the country combine disparate influences for a uniquely dark and melodic sound

BY BRETT CALLWOOD

ASHRR TO ASHRR, FUNK TO FUNKY

Things are happening fast for L.A.-based darkwave/post-rock band ASHRR. Having only formed at the beginning of 2018, the debut album, Oscillator, dropped in May and they’ve just released a new single, a cover of Siouxsie and the Banshees’ “Cities of Dust.” Meanwhile, the buzz has been increasing at a rate that is getting impossible to ignore. This beautifully stylized, melodic and super-dark band is here to stay.

“The band formed at the beginning of last year,” says producer and vocalist Josh Charles. “We kind of all got along really well in a way that was almost a brotherhood of men. We had a shared, common interest in just trying to make the best music we could without concern — if we really liked it, we were gonna be happy with it.”

Fellow producer and vocalist Ethan Allen says that the three didn’t initially assemble with the explicit intention of forming a band. Rather, Charles was working on another project with vocalist Steven Davis, and they brought Allen (who they hadn’t previously met) in to help.

“We started doing that together, and quickly found that we were very intrigued with the unique combination that the three of us brought,” Allen says. “Each of us have been doing this for a while in separate disciplines. I’ve been a member of a couple of bands in the past this great sound which Steven is able to deliver in a way that we don’t sound like any other bands. That was sort of our goal — to create a sound that isn’t really like anything we know.”

That weird band name is derived from Davis’ middle name, which is Asher. They just, y’know, cooled it up a bit. The three members are all from different places — Charles came to L.A. from the Midwest via New York City, while Davis is originally a Nashville boy. Allen grew up in Austin before moving to New Orleans and then here. Los Angeles proved to the musical watering hole, their meeting place. But Carles and Allen agree that the city hasn’t really impacted the sound.

“Like for so many, it’s the place where we happened to find each other and that probably wouldn’t have happened in too many other places,” Allen says. “Coming from such disparate backgrounds. But I don’t know that it’s the soundtrack of Los Angeles in any way.”

The most recent single, that cover of Siouxsie’s “Cities of Dust,” is an interesting choice. On one hand, ASHRR sounds nothing like the Banshees. On the other though, both share a dark and almost snarky, certainly biting vibe. It works.

“We liked the idea of a female singer, a powerful singer like Siouxsie, and then interpreting it with a male singer, which changes everything — the sonic textures, everything changes in trying to find a way to make that work and viable,” says Charles. “We just all love the song, felt that it was pertinent to what was going on in the world today.”

“If we were going to do a cover, it would likely not be Ariana Grande or something,” adds Allen. “It’s not off the table yet. But this song, it lyrically appealed to us because it’s kind of where the band started. It’s about the destruction of Pompeii and in some ways, for many people, these feel a little like the end of times. So that was very appealing to us, but also Siouxsie always had a spirit that was confrontational, had an element of threat to it, but also managed to have a pop sensibility. Those are all things we’re very interested in. We also wanted very much to do our own take on it, while paying real homage to what was so good about the spirit of the original.”

While ASHRR isn’t an overtly political band, it’s clear that they enjoy toying with political themes. Read between the lines, dig as little, and there’s a lot going on in there.

“There’s always this underlying feeling of uneasiness, even in the beauty of it,” says Charles. “It keeps it really unique and interesting.”

This week, they perform at the Resident, and the band will be playing all 11 tracks from the debut album, plus that Siouxsie cover and maybe a surprise or two.

“We’ve got a few things cooking in the lab,” says Allen. “We’ll have to see if they’re combustible enough yet.”

“When Ethan and I went to the studio to make this record, we played all the instruments essentially,” adds Charles. “Trying to put this all together in a live format was quite a challenge and we worked really hard to find the sound. As a band, live, we’re very different than what we were in the studio. It’s really exciting to see how the band has developed and formulated — we have really good players. That’s complicated but yet we try to let people know that it’s not. It’s a visual experience as well.”

After this show, they have another one lined up at the Moroccan Lounge, where they played their first gig. Then, they’ll be touring the west coast and preparing new material for release.

Like we said, ASHRR is here to stay.

ASHRR plays with Proper Junkies and Nightjacket at 8 p.m. on Tuesday, July 16 at the Resident.

PHOTO BY JENNICA ABRAMS

WWW.LAWEKaLY.COM
MUSIC

GO HEAR

FRI 7/12

Cyndi Lauper
@ HOLLYWOOD BOWL

Since the '80s, Cyndi Lauper has been tirelessly belting out pop-rock anthems such as “Girls Just Want To Have Fun,” “Time After Time,” and “True Colors,” while putting out a string of respectable albums. As relatively recently as 2016, she released the country-rock gem Detour. Frankly, Lauper is unstoppable. These two shows (she playing on Friday and Saturday), see Lauper performing with the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, which makes for a fascinating smash. Lauper’s voice, though wild and husky, will likely sound gorgeous alongside the technical brilliance of trained classical musicians. “Time After Time” in particular could well have fully grown adults weeping into their seats. Cécile McLorin Salvant also plays. —BRETT CALLWOOD

SAT 7/13

Joe Henry
@ LARGO AT THE CORONET

If there’s any one artist that works most deeply in touch with the phenomenon of intuition in American songwriting today, it’s Joe Henry. Intuition is an extortiously underrated aspect of the songwriting process. It’s something that’s easily learned — to learn it, you have to fail and fail very fucking often — and it isn’t something that’s easily taught, because how does one person show another person how to capture a moment and make it into art? For the better part of his 30 years as a singer, songwriter and producer, he’s honed that sense of intuition into something closer to extrasensory perception than it is the creation of art. What you’ll experience tonight is an increasingly scarce appearance by this most priceless of all American artists — and the emotions he stirs up within you with his songs are of a caliber that only the most intuitive of artists can summon forth. —DAVID COTNER

Paul McCartney
@ DODGER STADIUM

Even after more than 60 years in show biz, James Paul McCartney is still a people-pleaser with an apparently insatiable eagerness to be everything to everybody. On his current Freshen Up tour, which culminates at Dodger Stadium, he and his ace longtime band are playing about 38 songs. Fans are getting a little bit of everything — a smattering of the better tunes from 2018’s Egypt Station (including the rollicking “Come on to Me”), an Elvis-derived obscurity by his early band The Quarrymen (“In Spite of All the Danger”), and homages to his fallen partners George Harrison (“Something”) and John Lennon (“Being for the Benefit of Mr. Kite”). Paul being Paul, banal ditties (“Ob-La-Di, Ob-La-Da”) and mawkish, interminable ballads (“Let It Be,” “Hey Jude”) are juxtaposed randomly with sublime moments of pop grandeur (“Maybe I’m Amazed,” “I’ve Just Seen a Face”). —FALLING JAMES

MON 7/15

Ian Sweet
@ THE ECHO

Non-binary indie rocker Ian Sweet will be hosting a residency at The Echo every Monday in July, and that’s wonderful because more people need to hear their beautifully awkward sound. During a recent interview, Sweet told us that, “My sound is constantly evolving depending on the people I’m surrounded by or meeting/the environment I’m immersed in. This has a lot to do with being on tour often, that is where I do most of my writing — in new environments. I always want my songs to bring me to a place of understanding what I’m going through or trying to make sense of situations by framing them in time.” All of that will be clear throughout this month. —BRETT CALLWOOD

Sofia Bolt
@ ZEBULON

“How many fucking dreams must I have about you?” Sofia Bolt croons shyly on “Get Out of My Head,” from her debut album, Waves. “I moved across an ocean to get away from you.” Her sullen verses give way to a breezy chorus in which the Parisian native formerly known as Amelie Rousseaux lets her anger drift away in with a purifying, cathartically carefree melody. It’s a provocative introduction to a fascinating singer who relocated from France to Los Angeles two years ago. Not many new artists have collaborated with legendary pop tunesmith Van Dyke Parks, who worked on the record and also

BRETT CALLWOOD

REGENT THEATER

Jawbox
Having sold out the Saturday night at the Regent, Jawbox have added a second the following night, and it’s wonderful that more people will have the opportunity to see the recently reformed Washington, D.C., alt-rockers. Originally formed in 1989, the band split in ’97 after a string of excellent post-punk records on Ian MacKaye’s Dischord Records (among other labels) and, but for a brief spell in 2009, were gone (but not forgotten) until this year. But Jawbox are back. There’s no new album yet, but for now fans are going to be happy to hear songs from 1991’s Grippie, 1992’s Novelty, the major label For Your Own Special Sweetheart (Atlantic) and 1996’s self-titled album. Craig Wedren also plays. —BRETT CALLWOOD

ZEBULON

Waves

Jawbox

@ THE ECHO

“How many fucking dreams must I have about you?” Sofia Bolt croons shyly on “Get Out of My Head,” from her debut album, Waves. “I moved across an ocean to get away from you.” Her sullen verses give way to a breezy chorus in which the Parisian native formerly known as Amelie Rousseaux lets her anger drift away in with a purifying, cathartically carefree melody. It’s a provocative introduction to a fascinating singer who relocated from France to Los Angeles two years ago. Not many new artists have collaborated with legendary pop tunesmith Van Dyke Parks, who worked on the record and also

BRETT CALLWOOD

REGENT THEATER

Jawbox
Having sold out the Saturday night at the Regent, Jawbox have added a second the following night, and it’s wonderful that more people will have the opportunity to see the recently reformed Washington, D.C., alt-rockers. Originally formed in 1989, the band split in ’97 after a string of excellent post-punk records on Ian MacKaye’s Dischord Records (among other labels) and, but for a brief spell in 2009, were gone (but not forgotten) until this year. But Jawbox are back. There’s no new album yet, but for now fans are going to be happy to hear songs from 1991’s Grippie, 1992’s Novelty, the major label For Your Own Special Sweetheart (Atlantic) and 1996’s self-titled album. Craig Wedren also plays. —BRETT CALLWOOD

ZEBULON

Waves

Jawbox

@ THE ECHO

“How many fucking dreams must I have about you?” Sofia Bolt croons shyly on “Get Out of My Head,” from her debut album, Waves. “I moved across an ocean to get away from you.” Her sullen verses give way to a breezy chorus in which the Parisian native formerly known as Amelie Rousseaux lets her anger drift away in with a purifying, cathartically carefree melody. It’s a provocative introduction to a fascinating singer who relocated from France to Los Angeles two years ago. Not many new artists have collaborated with legendary pop tunesmith Van Dyke Parks, who worked on the record and also

BRETT CALLWOOD

REGENT THEATER

Jawbox
Having sold out the Saturday night at the Regent, Jawbox have added a second the following night, and it’s wonderful that more people will have the opportunity to see the recently reformed Washington, D.C., alt-rockers. Originally formed in 1989, the band split in ’97 after a string of excellent post-punk records on Ian MacKaye’s Dischord Records (among other labels) and, but for a brief spell in 2009, were gone (but not forgotten) until this year. But Jawbox are back. There’s no new album yet, but for now fans are going to be happy to hear songs from 1991’s Grippie, 1992’s Novelty, the major label For Your Own Special Sweetheart (Atlantic) and 1996’s self-titled album. Craig Wedren also plays. —BRETT CALLWOOD
THU July 11
SAOR

THU July 11
LEO BLACK

THU July 11
EMX PRESENTS: JACK FROZT, POPS, HONEY V, CHANTI B2B DEAD INSIDE

FRI July 12
HAVE A NICE LIFE

FRI July 12
TIMECOP 1983

SAT July 13
KIZZ DANIEL

SAT July 13
GLAMCOCKS PRESENT:
HOT MESH!

SUN July 14
SKALAND 2.0

TUE 7/16
Femme It Forward: Ashanti, Brandy, Monica
@ MICROSOFT THEATER
Femme It Forward will be an evening of live music from some of music's greatest names in R&B, including Ashanti, Brandy, Monica, Keri Hilson, Amerie and Lil’ Mo. Presented by Live Nation Urban, the new multi-platform series comprised of lineups curated by all females will spotlight female visionaries in the entertainment industry — both in front of and behind the scenes. The shows have featured both new and older female acts, from superstar Cardi B to newcomer Nicole Bus. This time, the mini festival is slated to take over Microsoft Theater in downtown Los Angeles with the most nostalgic names in ‘90s R&B. Of course, headliner Ashanti is no stranger to the tour life and is guaranteed to tear the stage down. — SHIRLEY JU

Mitski, Julianna Barwick
@ HOLLYWOOD PALLADIUM
On her fifth studio album, Be the Cowboy, Mitski Miyawaki alternates between intimate, confessional pop passages like “Gyser” and harder-rocking art-rock/new-wave opuses such as “Why Didn’t You Stop Me?” On the mournful, acoustic guitar-driven “Lonesome Love,” the Japanese-American vocalist belies the song’s folk-pop setting when she pointedly reveals, “Cause nobody butters me up like you, and nobody fucks me like me.” Mitski’s observations imbue the upbeat piano pop of “Me and My Husband” a hint of poetry: “I steal a few breaths from the world for a minute, and then I’ll be nothing forever.” Julianna Barwick, whose haunting elegy “Star Luz Black” was a moving highlight at L.A. Phil’s recent Noon to Midnight fest, wraps her vocals in loops and layers of dreamily engaging atmospherics and sublimely hypnotic echo chambers. — FALLING JAMES

WED 7/17
Bad Religion
@ THE OBSERVATORY
Bad Religion just never get old. Every gig is an event, every performance something to get super-excited about. That’s partly because Greg Graffin, Brett Gurewitz and the boys seem to be having a great time every time they set foot on stage. But also, the albums have been of a remarkably consistent high standard. They rarely (if ever) put out a dud, with this year’s Age of Unreason once again wowing fans and critics. Of course, Bad Religion have always been outspoken when it comes to matters of social and political unrest, so the current awful climate is food and drink to them. We need the band more than ever, and they’re delivering. — BRETT CALLWOOD

Jesca Hoop
@ BOOTLEG THEATER
Jesca Hoop’s music has been praised by Tom Waits, and the California native and longtime British resident has worked with Iron & Wine, Eels and Blake Mills, and twined her unusual vocals with the eerie harmonies of Nicole Eva Emery, who also performs on this bill. On her latest record, Strange, produced by John Parish (PJ Harvey), Hoop’s bewitching singing is interlaid with her percolating, percussive guitar patterns to stitch together mesmerizing idylls that are both dreamy and rooted firmly in the earth. Special guests Luce, Kate Stables and Justis add to the tonal variety, but ultimately it is Hoop’s abstract yet introspective songwriting and solemnly lulling vocals that create this strange mood of enchantment. — FALLING JAMES Hookups = Squirt.org

Visit www.squirt.org
to hook up today

---

Visually Appealing

Notices

GRAND OPENING

Sensual Massage

- The Best Sensual Massage
  - 1hr $79/12hr $49
  - Call Sarah
  - 323-336-2817
  - 323-654-4808

- Call Before 6pm
  - 818-919-8589

---

Playmates and soulmates... MegaMates

MegaMates

FREE

Visit www.squirt.org
to hook up today
Welcome to the New Normal

Experience life in the New Normal today. Present this page at any MedMen store to redeem this special offer.

10% off your purchase