The Creative Psyche as the Only Practical Graduate Education for Our Times with Susan Rowland Ph.D.

In an era of variability, the only certainty for our future is change, and moreover unpredictable change. How do we plan for twenty-first century lives when besieged by the unknown leading to unprecedented anxiety? What industry leaders tell us is that we need to educate for creativity in a world that has repressed the arts, humanities, myths, and creative psychotherapies almost out of existence. Pacifica’s programs restore psychological creativity and put soul into education, whether it be for re-imagined careers, changing research or the discovery of who you are.

Ballet

Getting Misty
American Ballet Theatre returns with the full-length classical ballet La Bayadère. Set in India, the ballet’s tragic love triangle bears a strong resemblance to the better-known opera Aida, in which a triumphant warrior is his sovereign’s choice to marry the ruler’s daughter, but the warrior is in love with a sacred temple dancer who is also being eyed in an unpreistly manner by the head priest. The demanding choreography and sumptuous production showcase the ballet’s signature mystic processions of ballerinas descending like a mirror image of the temple dancer. On opening night, local Misty Copeland dances the Raja’s daughter, Gamszetti, with Isabella Boylston as temple dancer Niklya and Jeffrey Cirio as warrior Solor. Dorothy Chandler Pavilion, 135 N. Grand Ave., downtown; Fri., Sat., July 13-14, 7:30 p.m.; Sun., July 15, 2 p.m.; $38-$50. musiccenter.org/tickets/events-by-the-music-center/Glorya-Kaufman-Dance/1718-season/abt. —Ann Haskins

Facing Extinction
Writer-director Clement Hil Goldberg has created a 50-minute masterpiece of surrealist political satire combining live action and stop-motion animation. A fantasy confection of glitter, style, kitsch and karma, Our Future Ends offers a neat, binary analogy between an anthropomorphized population of endangered lemur and a postmodern cult of queer spirituality. The idea is that parallel stories of extinction face the animal population and authentically indie queer spaces, as each is threatened by forces of commerce, industrialism, opioids and cultural appropriation. There are songs and dances, DJs and video, all starring Brontez Purnell, Heather Maria Acis and Siobhan Aluvalot, with Zakarry Drucker, Silas Howard, Xandra Ibarra, Ben McCoy and Maryam Farnaz Rostami as voices of the ancient, imperiled animated Malagasy. REDCAT, 631 W. Second St., downtown; Fri., July 13, 8:30-11 p.m.; $20. outfest.org/filmguide/our-future-ends. —Shana Nys Dambrot

FELTINALS

Lotus Life
Some years, the guests of honor don’t even bother to show up for their own party, but this month the lotus flowers are in full bloom at Echo Park Lake, just in time for the 38th annual Lotus Festival. The large plants are amphibious—their roots anchored in the lake bed while their pink flowers sprout grandly from shower nozzle–like seed heads as they float serenely atop the water on flat, green, saucer-shaped leaves. The lotus is revered in many Asian countries for its spiritual, symbolic aspects of renewal, while its namesake festival is an ongoing celebration of Asian culture. This year, the focus is on China, with folk dance, music, food, kung fu and the always thrilling dragon-boat races. CULTURE

The Original Boho Coffee Spot
Before coffeehouses became mainstream, corporate-owned hangouts, indie spots were the hub of choice (after bars) for artists and musicians to sip a cup of joe, socialize, create and connect. In L.A., the Onyx was the first authentic modern bohemian coffee spot, the place that defined Silver Lake for locals before outsiders made it a hipster haven. Owner John Leech opened the original location next to the Vista Theatre, then moved it to Vermont Avenue, where it became the Sequel, growing its loyal clientele (Beck, Keanu Reeves and Viggo Mortensen hung out or performed there). The place is missed, to say the least, so much so that reunions are organized every few years. This one is a two-parter. Experimental jams, spoken word, art and more from Onyx’s past will be conjured on Friday at Cafe Nela (a pre-reunion live music show featuring artsy acts including Tommy Chiffon Three, Mecalodias, Nostradamuss and Poisonous Members plus puppetry from Cinnamon Roll Gang). Then on Sunday, the Tribal Cafe hosts spoken readings, more jams and a barbecue in the back parking lot. Folk/punk/gospel trio The Mourners will play a set (with more TBA). Cafe Nela, 1906 Cypress Ave., Cypress; Fri., July 13, 8:30 p.m.-1 a.m.; $5. facebook.com/events/208444579159677. Tribal Cafe, 1651 W. Party Boat
Disco Dining Club, the thematic party meld of food and frolic created by dinner-party diva Courtney Nichols, takes to the sea for a new culinary/clubbing adventure. Inspired by Grace Jones’ iconic May Day in James Bond pic A View to a Kill, the bodacious boat trip offers canapés and a buffet-style brunch from Gabriel Cappelli (Red Rooster, the Edmon), a curated open bar from Our/Los Angeles Vodka and DJ sets from Lazersonic and DJ Val Fleury spinning techno (and hopefully some Duran Duran). DDC’s hedonist haps always attract a fabulously fashioned (and friendly) crowd. BOOKS
Deciphering a Mystery
Set in Hollywood, Raymond Chandler’s The Big Sleep took the mystery genre from its pulp-magazine roots into a more emotionally resonant literary intensity distinguished by rich, detailed descriptions, which reflected private detective Philip Marlowe’s inner world. The mystery surrounding this mystery is that even Chandler didn’t fully understand the novel’s dense, tangled plot. When Howard Hawks and his screenwriters, working on their 1946 film adaptation, wanted to know who killed the chauffeur, Chandler admitted that he didn’t know. Some of the mysteries are solved in The Annotated Big Sleep, with new background information from editors Owen Hill, Pamela Jackson and Anthony Rizzuto. This evening, Judith Freeman, David L. Ulin and other Chandler aficionados read from their favorite sections of the iconic novel. Skylight Books, 1818 N. Vermont Ave., Los Feliz; Tue., July 17, 7:30 p.m.; free. TEATR
Shakespeare in the Park
“The course of true love never did run smooth,” Lysander counsels Hermia early in William Shakespeare’s comedy A Midsummer Night’s Dream. Love is strange and ever perplexing, but it’s also a merry delight in the hands of the folks at Independent Shakespeare Company, who continue their traditional series of free performances of the Bard’s works in Griffith Park. The expansive outdoor setting aptly evokes the play’s enchanted-forest locale. The cast includes Evan Lewis Smith, Aisha Kabia, Katie Powers-Faulk and Xavi Moreno. (Beginning July 28, it plays in rep with the less pastoral Titus Andronicus.) Griffith Park, 4730 Crystal Springs Drive, Griffith Park; Wed.-Thu., July 18-19, 7 p.m.; through Sept. 2; free. ART
Google Worship
Painter Louis Carreon combines a kind of post-urban, punk-infused outsider/folk aesthetic with a fraught use of mixed-media materials to create energetic scenes and portraits of modern life. In his new show, “Church • State,” Carreon focuses his attention on the situation with one major, monolithic aspect of that life: Google. More specifically, the near total control we have given Google over established institutional authorities and experts, not to mention the mass outsourcing of our own memories and experiences. We trust Google as we used to trust God, our elders and ourselves. On the other hand, the almost universal access to information represented by Google is real human progress. The artist seems to be saying that the least we can do is acknowledge that the cure contains elements of the disease. The release of Marvel/Disney’s Black Panther was met with, besides gargantuan box office numbers, mass rejoicing. “At last,” screamed the masses. “A powerful black superhero in the leading role (unlike Falcon or War Machine) on the big screen (unlike Luke Cage or DC’s Black Lightning) — this is something that we can get behind.”

To a great extent, and to Marvel’s credit, the masses were right. Black Panther is indeed a very good movie, and the character is a bona fide badass. But — and not to be the turd in the punchbowl here — what the hell took so long? Because we are way behind schedule. Some might point to the likes of Spawn, Steel or the Blade franchise — but they’re missing the point. For the record, the first was a bad movie based on a cool indie comic character, the second was a terrible movie based on a DC lower-league character, and the third — well, Blade is an awesome character and the first movie (at least) was also great.

But Spawn and Blade are anti-heroes — shadowy characters that blur the line between good and bad. The movies were not for kids. Black Panther is arguably the first quality superhero movie about a real role model with an African-American in the leading role. Meanwhile, other minorities are scrambling for the limited amount of space on the screen or in the pages of comic books. We shouldn’t have had to wait until 2017’s Wonder Woman for a quality comic book movie with a female in the lead role (Tank Girl is a notable exception; Barb Wire is not). It makes news if a comic book character (such as Iceman) is revealed to be gay, Thor is a female or Ms. Marvel is Muslim. It shouldn’t.

We need more. And for now, it appears that the “Big Two” of Marvel and DC are only going to throw breadcrumbs. That’s why the indie publishing houses have to lead the way — to shine lights where others aren’t. And that is exactly what Black Mask Studios is doing.

Black Mask was founded by Matteo Pizzolo, as well as comic book writer Steve Niles and Bad Religion guitarist Brett Gurewitz, in 2012. Niles is known for titles as celebrated as 30 Days of Night and Batman: Gotham County Line. Pizzolo had been running an indie film production-distribution company from the age of 20, having already made an indie film called Threat, before starting Occupy Comics around the time that Occupy Wall Street was kicking off.

“I was heading to New York Comic-Con, and I mentioned to some of my comic creator friends that we should do something at NYCC to bring attention to the cool protest going on downtown,” Pizzolo says. “A bunch of them were into it, and we started putting it together, but before NYCC started there was the pepper spraying at Occupy and the whole thing became a media circus. It didn’t need us to draw attention to it anymore. But everyone who came together to spread the word at NYCC still wanted to help, and it seemed that even though there was plenty of attention on Occupy Wall Street, lots of people had questions about why these folks

The ethos of the house is to uncover previously undiscovered voices — artists and writers — who have something to say that might not jell neatly with the image of the bigger companies, for whatever reason. Pizzolo goes so far as to say that, if another publisher would publish a title, it probably isn’t right for Black Mask. Pizzolo asks comic book creators to fill out a questionnaire in order to get a feel for what they’re about — how personal their story is to them.

“It’s just a different approach than listening to concepts over and over,” he says. “We’re not investing in concepts, we’re investing in people, so you have to suss out who these people are and what they want to do. And it’s actually kind of a lot of work to fill out the questionnaire, and that alone is a bit of a winnowing process, because you have to really want to submit to Black Mask to go through the bother of doing it. But it also enables us to get a sense of the core ideas within the work, what it’s really about, besides the basic stuff like genre and plot. And it’s been pretty effective. We get tons and tons of submissions and we’re a boutique shop — we have no interest in competing in terms of volume, so unfortunately we can’t pick up all that many books. But the questionnaire has given us some of our most exciting books. Kim & Kim, for example, came in through the submission form.”

Ah yes, Kim & Kim. Created by Magdalene “Mags” Visaggio, the book tells the tale of a pair of interdimensional bounty hunters who happen to be queer. The inspiration, Visaggio says, came from Starbucks.

“I was in line at a Starbucks waiting for my drink, and there were two teenagers hanging out in front of me who were both hanging out in front of me who were both happening to be queer. The inspiration, Visaggio says, came from Starbucks. I thought about that. I landed on interdimensional bounty hunting. Everything else popped in fairly quickly in terms of what the book was going to be. There wasn’t a key moment of inspiration. The whole thing with Kim & Kim is it’s nothing but me throwing shit against the wall. I call it ‘trash gumbo.’ All the shit that I love, in four issues.”

Visaggio is keen to point out that, while the title characters identify as queer, neither Kim nor Kim is actually gay. More importantly, the book isn’t about their queerness.

“I guess it’s the thing everyone wants to focus on,” she says. “It’s a trans main character written by a trans person, and that’s really rare in comics. I understand that and I’ve definitely ridden that wave. But the book isn’t about transness or queerness as such. It’s always been about these two people who are both queer, and their super-fucked-up lives. But the book’s about two 20-something best friends doing their best to establish themselves as grown-ups and utterly failing. It’s a book about failure.”

The fact that the book features a trans main character (Kim Quatro, for the record) but that her transness isn’t the focus of the book is all-important. When that is revealed in the story, it’s done without drama. The characters are all previously aware, and it’s mentioned in a matter-of-fact manner during a very natural conversation. That’s what makes the book so vital.

“That got a lot of attention, how I handled that scene,” Visaggio says. “Part of it for me is I just want to normalize queerness. I want queer characters who are just living queer lives but whose lives are not defined solely by their queerness. I don’t have any stories in the works where the spotlight is on
WANNA GET INTO THE CANNABIS INDUSTRY?
Another Black Mask title that has been making waves for all the right reasons is Black, which asks the intriguing question, what if only black people had superpowers? The book was created by Kwanza Osajyefo and Tim Smith 3 and was inspired by Osajyefo’s experiences working in comic books but not seeing many staff members who were people of color, LGBTQ or women. It is, he says, a very male-dominated industry, and that lack of diversity is reflected heavily in the stories that are being told.

“It became very clear to me that the reason I wasn’t seeing myself and characters of color in comic books is because there were very few in the business,” he says. “I was a fan of things like the Avengers, the X-Men and stuff like that, and all superhero books have these characters who are outsiders on some level. The difference being, particularly with the X-Men, they can take these costumes off and move about through normal society. Nobody’s going to give them any guff. With stories like that attempting to be analogies or parables for discrimination, it just fell flat to me. It literally made me think, what if only black people had superpowers? That’s the tagline for Black. Once that sentence emerged in my mind, it was sort of like an explosion.

The story is about a young man named Kareem Jenkins who gets misidentified by the police, shot and killed. Unlike in real life, he comes back to life with superpowers and finds that he’s part of a small group of people who have had powers for centuries. He has to decide if he’s going to help keep it a secret, or if he’s going to be out and proud about who he is and what he can do. Black led to spinoff titles that took the concept in other, equally intriguing directions. One of those is America’s Sweetheart, within which it is revealed that the most powerful being in the world is a black woman.

With America’s Sweetheart, I wanted to expand the line,” Osajyefo says. “It was about thinking, there are black people who really do believe in America, what it can stand for and what it can be. It intrigued me to think about a young, superpowered black girl who really believes and is intrinsically good herself. She sees the best in people, she wants to be a hero, wants to make people at peace with the idea that there are suddenly superpowered black people. So she puts on the patriotic suit and decides to go out there and become a superhero, and help.”

Things don’t go well for our hero, though. The social media-driven, cynical world that we live in leads to a backlash that threatens to drag her down. “To put it into context, there are parts in the book where she saves people, and then it’s questioned — why did you save those people versus these other people?” Osajyefo explains. “That’s something that you can uniquely say is been. It’s the sort of thing where, I thought if you paralleled that in a superhero, and had someone who’s by every measure doing the right thing but still questioned, it would make an intriguing story.”

Another Black spinoff, Widows and Orphans, is chillingly prophetic, telling the tale of the children of superpowered people being torn away from their parents and sold on the black market. Considering the children being separated from their parents in the news right now, Osajyefo says it’s one of many examples of how he’s damned to be relevant.

“This might be new news, but it’s been going on,” he says. “The same as discrimination, prejudice and racism has been going on — we just have more public mediums now to bring that to the surface or to a larger audience’s attention. When I was writing this, I was actually thinking more about the slave trade that’s going on still in Northern Africa and the Middle East. In the Sudan, a lot of people are still being captured and put into slavery. I just read an article about children in the Congo being forced to work in coal mines. It’s a real tragedy that we live in this modern society where we’re inventing self-driving cars, but we can’t seem to solve these basic human things like not enslaving children.”

Osajyefo believes that, while Marvel’s movies have made progress in representing characters of color, there’s plenty of work to be done within the pages of the comic books. DC, meanwhile, is some way behind Marvel.

“In terms of bigger media like television and film, where I think you have a little more diversity, you’re seeing people far more willing to give up the reins, particularly because they want that success,” he says. “If you look at Black Panther, that was Kevin Feige [president of Marvel Studios] stepping out of the wind and saying, ‘This is not my wheelhouse. I understand the character and all that stuff, but somebody else needs a different kind of passion for it.’ That’s not necessarily what we see in publishing. I think Marvel’s doing a better job of it. DC’s still quite tone-deaf in my opinion, and I think a lot of that stems from internal staffing. If you don’t have the people sitting in a room, influencing the content, interacting with the higher-ups, then there’s a lot of things that I think just aren’t in their purview.”

Ultimately, Black Mask has proven to be the perfect home for Osajyefo and his titles. He was already a fan of Matt Rosenberg’s We Can Never Go Home book, before he knew that it was a Black Mask title. A Kickstarter to find a publisher for Black saw Black Mask coming forward, and the creators were sold.

“Just realizing that they had a no-holds-barred, punk-rock ethos, and a lot of books that were telling a story that had much more meaning... and purpose to them,” Osajyefo says. “That was something I thought was a shared ethos. It became a no-brainer. Despite the branding overlap [Black in Black Mask], it wasn’t even a thought. This is where we belong. It’s been a great ride, too. They’re all about going out there and stirring the pot, and we are, too.”

Alexis Ziritt, the Venezuelan artist on the frankly beautiful Space Riders book, concurs, saying the people at Black Mask essentially let the creators do “what we want.” That level of creative freedom is naturally going to be attractive to writers and artists, but that’s the result of the rigorous vetting process Pizzolo talked about. There’s a trust that these people want to tell real stories with real meaning. Important work that will rattle cages. Pizzolo doesn’t need to micromanage. That said, when he needs to get involved, he does. When he felt that the Kim & Kim title was going to get lost in the immense pile of comic books that are published each month, he wrote letters to retailers in order to get their support championing it.

“I knew it was special, but I also knew comic shops would have no way of knowing that it was special,” Pizzolo says. “Even though there’s thousands of comic shops, there’s just a couple of hundred ‘tastemaker’ comic shops who really make or break books. If a comic shop clerk is championing a book, it makes all the difference. It was good timing right before Kim & Kim came out because Black Mask had just had a string of hits. So I hand-wrote letters to the top 200 comic shops about why I thought Kim & Kim was special and important, and why I thought they should give it a chance and champion it and share it with their customers. I still hear comic shop owners, buyers and clerks tell me that letter made all the difference in them deciding to give the book a chance. It was just a nudge, though — after me giving a heads-up, it was all about quality.”

While Pizzolo has taken to the role of publisher, distributor and marketing guru like a duck to water, people always assume the book is just a reactionary hit piece against Trump becoming president, but I put that book together before the election. It was inspired by two things: In a broad way it was about how toxic the primary season had become, how it seemed like even like-minded people of the same party couldn’t agree on anything, and people who weren’t like-minded were literally punching each other on TV. But then the personal part was, it was during the peak of the California drought when, if you asked for a glass of water at the diner and didn’t finish it, everyone would look at you like you were a monster. And all this was happening at a time where even Democrats were at each other’s throats over Bernie or Hillary, or the Republican primary where the candidates themselves were literally punching each other so viciously I didn’t even feel comfortable letting my kids watch the debates. And that’s where Calexit came from.”

He has other similarly thought-provoking books, such as Young Terrorists and Billionaire Killers. Pizzolo knows exactly what he wants from a Black Mask comic book, and it’s an ethos he carries forward into his regular life. There will be a Black Mask presence at San Diego Comic-Con this year, including panels and signings, but more important, there will be some Calexit-related political organizing going on.

“After the election, we felt that a lot of our readers were feeling more at risk than they had been before the election, so it became really important to us that the book [Calexit] not wallow in dystopia at a time when people are scared,” Pizzolo says. “We didn’t want anyone to be more depressed when they put the book down than they were when they picked it up, so we decided to use the back of the book as a place for positive, constructive nonfiction stuff about political organizing. If people can get involved in grassroots politics if they want to. So I started interviewing organizers and activists for the back of the comic, and that developed into me forming a super PAC called Become the Government that I fund with my profits from Calexit, and I’ve been documenting the process in the back of the comic. It was pretty thrilling that both candidates we covered in the back of the comic just won their primaries. It’s an exciting time to be involved. I keep saying local politics is the new punk rock.”

At Comic-Con, Calexit will be working with the grassroots organizing group Indivisible: San Diego on a voter registration drive. Pizzolo is also doing a special panel with the Indivisible organizers. He’s determined to not only tell important, all-inclusive stories but also to make sure that translates into important, real-world work. Yeah, this isn’t The Avengers.

“After the election, we felt that a lot of our readers were feeling more at risk than they had been before the election, so it became really important to us that the comic [Calexit] not wallow in dystopia at a time when people are scared.”

RESCUING BURBANK’S CASTAWAY

BY MICHELE STUEVEN

If you grew up in the San Fernando Valley, chances are good that you celebrated prom, a wedding, graduation or other special occasion at the Castaway in Burbank, with its sweeping views of the Valley all the way to downtown L.A.

After a recent $10 million overhaul by John Tallichet of Specialty Restaurants Corp., the 12,500-square-foot, 54-year-old landmark perched atop the Verdugo Hills has reopened with a multilevel restaurant that guarantees a view from every table and a sprawling patio dotted with fireplaces.

The dated Gilligan’s Island theme has been replaced by a slicker Hollywood feel, a wink to the film and TV studios with its sweeping views of the Valley all the way to downtown Burbank. If you’re celebrating a birthday, you’ll likely be greeted at the concierge–like check-in desk.

For small plates, you can build your own charcuterie board with duck prosciutto, bresaola, Culatello di Zibello (a prized Italian ham) and assorted European cheeses. There are also plenty of surf options, like a delightful scallop duo — one is carpaccio topped with tangerine granita, the other is roasted and topped with brown butter. Another good choice is the tender charred octopus with crispy potatoes, a squid ink emulsion and 24-hour tomatoes.

In addition to the amazing Butcher’s Block of choices of large plates, there’s also a dramatic whole roasted branzino with shaved fennel and tomato served on top of potato puree with a hint of citrus. The roasted tricolor cauliflower is Pollaci’s unique version with hazelnut citrus. The roasted tricolor cauliflower is Pollaci’s unique version with hazelnut.

Small dinner plates range from $12 to $18 and main courses from $26 to $48, with sides from $8 to $10.

Take a Sangria Crawl

SEVEN SPOTS — INCLUDING A RECIPE TO TRY AT HOME — FOR THE PERFECT SUMMER DRINK

BY MICHELE STUEVEN

Summer is heating up and the days are getting longer — perfect for a sangria crawl across town. There’s a wealth of juicy fruit at the farmers markets to make your own and about as many different versions as there are tacos in L.A. Here are a few that we stumbled across, starting at the beach:

A special treat if you are celebrating with a crowd for weekend brunch is the Sangria Punch Bowl at Playa Provisions in Playa del Rey, which serves four at $40 a bowl. The breezy dockside back porch is a relaxing spot to spend a Sunday or stop on your beachside bike ride. Playa Provisions, 119 Culver Blvd., Playa del Rey; (310) 689-5019, playaprosvisions.com.

Leave it to the vegans. The Chic Summer Sangria at Café Gratitude in Venice is a mix of rosé, hibiscus, watermelon, lime and mint, and a good deal at $10 a glass. Café Gratitude, 512 Rose Ave., Venice; (424) 231-8000, cafegratitude.com.

Perched at the corner of Argyle and Yucca, inside the Kimpton Everly Hotel, Jane Q is a neighborhood go-to for a laid-back Mediterranean dining experience in the heart of Beachwood Canyon. The all-day café offers Sangria on Tap ($14 per glass) and Sangria Punch Bowl ($25) with red wine, market fruit and brandy, perfect for groups to share. Jane Q, 1800 Argyle Ave., Hollywood; (213) 279-3534, janeqcafe.com.

The Sinful Sangria at Granville includes a blend of Burgundy and merlot, cinnamon, mango, pineapple, oranges, brown sugar, orange juice and ginger ale. It is $9 a glass and $27 for a shareable carafe and available at all Granville locations. 807 American Way, The Americana at Brand, Glendale; (818) 550-0479; 121 N. San Fernando Blvd., Burbank; (818) 848-4726; 12345 Ventura Blvd., Studio City; (818) 506-7050; 8701 Beverly Blvd., West Hollywood; (424) 528-5160, granvillecafe.com.

Whether your crawl begins or ends downtown, stop at the epicenter of modern Mexican cuisine, Border Grill. Always coming up with something new on the menu, Mary Sue Milliken and Susan Feniger slide into the summer season with their version, which combines red wine, brandy, orange, lime, melon and cinnamon — for a cocktail that is both fruity and spicy. The BG Sangria is available for $10 on the sunny outdoor patio, just a short walk to the main Metro station at Seventh Street. Border Grill, 445 S. Figueroa St., downtown; (213) 486-5171, bordergrill.com.

Fundamental DTLA’s Claret Jug is a combination of grenache, gin, Luxardo maraschino, pineapple and sparkling wine. It’s available for brunch Saturday and Sunday in the airy downtown space and fills six full glasses at $35 a jug. Fundamental DTLA, 750 S. Grand Ave., #30, downtown; (213) 935-8180, fundamental dtla.com.

And if you just want to stay in and lounge around your own patio, here’s one of my favorite sangria recipes, courtesy of Kandarian Organic Farms:

- 1 bottle Moscato wine
- ½ cup Courvoisier cognac
- 1 tsp. fennel pollen
- Melons, strawberries, raspberries, blueberries and pineapple — or your favorite fruit combo
- Sparkling water (or prosecco)

Slice fruit to your preference and add it to a pitcher with the fennel pollen. Cover with wine and Courvoisier and chill for several hours. Serve with a splash of sparkling water or prosecco for some bubbles.

Where to find a huge selection of comic books and collectibles without going to Comic-Con

BY LISA BEEBE

Comic-Con 2018 begins Thursday, July 19, but comic-loving Angelenos don’t have to drive two hours south to immerse themselves in the comic book world. If you’re still feeling the pain of Meltdown Comics’ closing in April, you’re not alone, but the stores listed here are all doing their part to serve the local comics community and preserve the genre while proving that the essence of the culture isn’t cosplay or blockbuster movies — it’s storytelling, art and fantasy.

Since it can’t be Comic-Con year-round, here’s where to stock up on comics and collectibles anytime.

Alternate Universe
Alternate Universe has been selling comics within walking distance of Dodger Stadium since 2014. Owner Chris Cortez says, “We do three things — we do comics, toys and games.” The store also holds weekly Magic the Gathering events attracting serious fantasy card players from around L.A. 1498 W. Sunset Blvd., Ste. 1, Echo Park; (213) 537-0992, facebook.com/alternateuniverse.

Blastoff Comics
Blastoff Comics opened in 2012, selling everything from vintage comics and toys to animation art. Every month the store donates a portion of its proceeds to a different charity. This month it’s the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. Co-owner and chief creative officer Scott Tipton says, “We pride ourselves on being a part of the community through our events, our charity work, and our desire to be a welcome respite from a weary world for anyone and everyone looking for a place to belong and an escape through literature and comic books.” 5118 Lankershim Blvd., North Hollywood; (818) 980-2665, blastoffcomics.com.

Collector’s Paradise
Collector’s Paradise opened its Canoga Park store in 1994 and added the Old Town Pasadena location in 2010. Co-owner Edward Greenberg says they try to keep the Comic-Con vibe going all year. “We have over 50 signings and other events per year, between our two locations.” 7131 Winnetka Ave., Canoga Park; (818) 999-9455. Also at 319 S. Arroyo Parkway, Unit 4, Pasadena; (626) 577-6694, comicsandcards.net.

The Comic Bug
The Comic Bug opened in June 2004. Owner Mike Willman says, “We are very interactive with the L.A. comic book creator and fan community, with weekly signings, classes and creator meetings.” On Wednesday evenings, dubbed Sketchy Bug Night, “we normally host around 50 comic creators who come from all areas of Los Angeles to network, inspire and encourage each other’s art and storytelling,” he says. 1807 Manhattan Beach Blvd., Manhattan Beach; (310) 372-6704. Also at 4267 Overland Ave., Culver City; (310) 204-3240, thecomicbug.com.

Comic Cellar
Comic Cellar has two locations in the San Gabriel Valley. The colorful shops are more than just comics sellers — they also carry comic book memorabilia and toys, including a wide selection of Funko Pops. Comic Cellar has been in L.A., Golden Apple, aka the “Comic Shop to the Stars,” was founded by Bill Ray, the graphic novel impresario, and now runs the store with the help of Sharon; his wife, Kendra; his daughter; and the family dog. He says, “We host signings with everybody in the industry to promote movies, TV shows, comic books — of course — and artwork.” 7108 Melrose Ave., Hancock Park; (323) 658-6047, goldenapplecomics.com.

Golden Apple
Probably the best-known comics shop in L.A., Golden Apple, aka the “Comic Shop to the Stars,” was founded by Bill Ray and Sharon Liebowitz in 1979. His son, Ryan Liebowitz, took over after Bill died in 2004, and now runs the store with the help of Sharon; his wife, Kendra; his daughter; and the family dog. He says, “We host signings with everybody in the industry to promote movies, TV shows, comic books — of course — and artwork.” 7108 Melrose Ave., Hancock Park; (323) 658-6047, goldenapplecomics.com.

Hi De Ho Comics
Now in its 40th year, Hi De Ho is L.A.’s oldest comic book shop. The store recently relocated but is still in Santa Monica. Eddie deAngelis, co-owner and manager, says, “We’ve always had a reputation for stocking and finding some stuff that’s a little more out there and esoteric, a little more weird. We have more of an indie vibe than other comic shops in the area do, and we do as much as we can to support local creators.” Hi De Ho’s majority owner is Geoffrey Patterson Jr., owner

It’s a well-rounded store.” 11390 Ventura Blvd., Ste. 9, Studio City; (818) 761-3465, djuniversalcomics.com.

TV TIME AT

Marvel universe and Walking Dead bring more than just premiere footage and stars to the fans

BY MICHELE RAPHAEL

This year’s San Diego Comic-Con has more than 170 TV-related offerings in its July 19-22 lineup, an abundance of choice that may make fans’ heads spin. Most interactive options — meet-and-greets, panels and screenings — are from TV spinoffs of comic book series, from Arrow to The Walking Dead. We’ve chosen our five must-see TV events at Comic-Con, but you can make your own guide at comic-con.org/cc/programming-schedule.

Arrow Q&A with cast and producers

Oliver Queen aka Green Arrow was finally forced to reveal his superhero identity in Arrow’s season 6 finale. He’ll be living alongside the criminals he put behind bars as he settles into life at Slabside Maximum Security Prison. At the Arrow panel, fans will be the first to learn from the cast and producers what this means for Oliver and his team. Arrow returns to the CW this fall on Mondays at 9 p.m.

Screening/presentation of Impulse

New YouTube Original drama Impulse, Doug Liman’s genre-bending action-thriller, debuted June 6 on YouTube Premium; all 10 episodes now are available. Liman (Swingers, The Bourne Identity, Jumper) directed and executive produced the series, based on sci-fi teletporing book/movie Jumper.

“I have always been interested in characters with superpowers. Not superheros,” Liman tells L.A. Weekly. “Jason Bourne is a superhero of sorts — and I’m very proud of that franchise. But Jumper was my attempt at making a film about an actual supernatural superpower. And I felt that I had lost my way a little bit. It wasn’t personal enough. So the Jumper world was one I was eager to jump into and see if I could get it right. Make something that was both epic in scale and deeply personal.”

According to Liman, Impulse sticks to the spirit of the Jumper books. “But like with Bourne, I invented my own universe and characters.” And course, since Star Trek and before, everyone has been obsessed by teleporting. So how does the show achieve it in a believable way?

“I was told I couldn’t copy the teleportation look of Jumper. Limitations actually push me to do my best work. And never has that been more true than with Impulse,” Liman says. “I invented a whole new look and feel — something that feels way more honest to me — where Henry’s [aka Henrietta’s] initial jumps would be violent and messy. It gave us a whole new storyline because she gravely wounds someone the first time she teleports.”

At the Con, fans can watch scenes from the series with Liman, exec producers Gene Klein and David Barts and showrunner Lauren LeFranc, plus stars Maddie Hasson and Missi Pyle. Thu., July 19, noon-12:50 p.m.; Indigo Ballroom, Hilton San Diego Bayfront.

TMNT Reboot’s Virtual-Reality Experience, Panel and Screening

To promote Rise of the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles, the upcoming TMNT reboot, Nickelodeon is presenting Rise of the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles Live, a virtual reality experience that immerses users in the iconic Turtles’ New York City world and lets them have convos with Mikey or Donnie — voiced live by Brandon Mychal Smith and Josh Brener, respectively. Nick’s 1,800-square-foot booth will feature a towering NYC cityscape, with a hidden Turtles lair, plus collectibles and customizable tees and totes; giveaways; costumed character appearances; and signings with the voice casts and creators from Rise of the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.

“TMNT fans are incredible and passionate. One of the great things about the TMNT franchise is that there’s been so many iterations of it throughout the years, there’s a version each generation of viewer can identify with as ‘their’ Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles — and still be able to appreciate the franchise as a whole,” co-executive producer Andy Suriano tells L.A. Weekly. The Rise of the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles panel, moderated by Buzzfeed’s Keely Flaherty, will screen never-before-seen clips from the upcoming series and feature its cast, including Omar Miller as Raph, Ben Schwartz as Leo, Josh Brener as Donnie, Brandon Smith as Mikey, Kat Graham as April O’Neil and Eric Bauza as Splinter, as well as co-executive producers Suriano and Ward and legendary voice director Rob Paulsen. Thu., July 19, 1:45-2:45 p.m., Room 6A.

Marshall, Johnathon Schaech and Riki Lind and Skyler Samuels. The show returns for the second half of Season 3. Sat., July 21, 2:30-3:15 p.m., Ballroom 20.

The Gifted: Season 2 called into question who was the hero and villain. Fans can check out The Gifted panel, at 12:15 p.m., featuring stars of the show. Fri., July 20. The panel, set for 11:15 a.m., features stars Andrew Lincoln, Norman Reedus, Danai Gurira, Melissa McBride and Jeffrey Dean Morgan, with executive producer/showrunner Angela Kang, plus the aforementioned Gimple, Kirkman, Hurd, Alpert and Nicotero. The panelists will give a sneak peek into Season 3, debuting in October on AMC.

The interactive Dead Quarters, an immersive experience, features a curated walk through settings inspired by The Walking Dead — the Sanctuary, a 22-foot zombie slide; and photo opps with the walker composer and Negan’s “Fleming Lucille.”

Fans can check out The Walking Dead: Our World, AMC and Next Games’ location-based, augmented-reality mobile game, which launches July 12, and play it in a unique Walking Dead-themed setting, filled with walking walkers with Rick, Daryl, Michonne and others from the series. The Walking Dead: Our World will give players an exclusive, limited-time Comic-Con Special Encounter in-game activation, which will reward them with guaranteed “Rare” or “Epic” characters from The Walking Dead series to add to their collections in the game.

A Tribute to Bogie and a Hungarian Rarity
Saturday, July 14

Saturday night is Tiki Night at the Egyptian Theatre. At 4 p.m., the American Cinematheque will open its famous courtyard to all manner of tiki-related art, memorabilia, clothes and accessories. At 5 p.m., King Kukulee & The Frikki Tikis, accompanied by the Polynesian Paradise Dancers, will perform ukulele novelty songs for the enjoyment of all. Two recent documentary shorts will be screened starting at 7:30 in the theater. Bosko is a 30-minute portrait of artist Bosko Hrnjak, who helped revive the ancient art of tiki-carving. A Whimsical Engineer relates, in 29 minutes, the saga of Rolly Crump, the Disney Imagineer responsible for inventing Disneyland’s Enchanted Tiki Room. Both Hrnjak and Crump will tune in (the latter via Skype) for a post-screening Q&A moderated by Denny Moyerhan (alias King Kukulee). For those wondering, the courtyard’s no-host bar will be open during the festivities. Egyptian Theatre, 6712 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood, Sat., July 14, 7:30 p.m.; $15. Los Angeles Filmforum presents Dream Reconstructions, an avant-garde feature created by Hungarian architect, artist and filmmaker Miklós Erdély. Finished in 1977, this experimental project revolves around several staged dream sequences, which form a discourse on modes of representation. The evening is a collaboration with the Wende Museum and the Getty Research Institute, in conjunction with the exhibition “Promote, Tolerate, Ban: Art and Culture in Cold War Hungary” at the Wende. Spielberg Theatre at the Egyptian, 6712 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood, Sun., July 15, 7:30 p.m.; $10. (323) 466-3456, lfilmforum.org.

Tuesday, July 17

LACMA’s Tuesday Matinees series continues its monthlong hat-tip to Don Bluth, the independent animator who rose to prominence in the 1980s after breaking with Disney. This week’s screening is The Land Before Time, the 1988 dinosaur adventure executive produced by George Lucas and Steven Spielberg. There is a patina of melancholy hanging over this cute kids feature, considering that all the species present will become extinct in a few million years. Children get in for only $2. LACMA, 5905 Wilshire Blvd., Mid-Wilshire; Tue., July 17, 1 p.m.; $4. (323) 857-6000, lacma.org.

Thursday, July 19

The Aero Theatre launches a generous tribute to Humphrey Bogart, the iconic, cigarette-chewing tough guy of Hollywood’s golden age. It begins not with the omnipresent Casablanca but with the gloriously downbeat In a Lonely Place, in which Bogart plays Dixon Steele, a burned-out studio screenwriter embroiled in a murder investigation. Directed by Nicholas Ray, the film essentially replays the director’s doomed relationship with Gloria Grahame, who, in a perverse meta-moment, plays opposite Bogart. This powerful and despairing film will be presented in a new-to-L.A. crisp DCP. The second feature of the evening is Deadline U.S.A., in which Bogie plays a newspaper editor determined to go after the ringleader of a successful organized crime unit. Aero Theatre, 1328 Montana Ave., Santa Monica; Sat., July 19, 7:30 p.m.; $12. (323) 466-3456, americancinemathequecalendar.com.

Laemmle’s Throwback Thursdays series offers a screening of Devil in a Blue Dress, the stylish 1995 noir based on Walter Mosley’s novel. Denzel Washington plays Easy Rawlins, an ex-G.I. turned private eye navigating the seamy underbelly of postwar South L.A. Director Carl Franklin’s talent for character-driven storytelling is in high gear, and he gets a standout performance from Don Cheadle as Easy’s trigger-happy associate. Eat/Sleep/Hear will have a food truck in the neighborhood for easy snacking. Laemmle NoHo, 5420 Lankershim Blvd., North Hollywood, Thu., July 19, 7:30 p.m.; $12. DON’T WORRY, HE WON’T GET FAR ON FOOT

Gus Van Sant should feel right at home telling the story of John Callahan, an eccentric quadriplegic cartoonist from Portland, Oregon, who’s led a long road to recovery from alcoholism. He should be another of the director’s rebel outsiders, as seen in My Own Private Idaho, Last Days and Milk. Sadly, Don’t Worry, He Won’t Get Far on Foot does little justice to this rich and complex storytelling opportunity. Joaquin Phoenix naturally brings Callahan’s sketchpad. The timeline oscillates between screaming at his attendant for a bottle of booze and falling out of his wheelchair in front of an audience of shocked teenagers and having his catheter come loose. This biopic should be another of the director’s rebel outsiders, if there’s one thing Van Sant does very well here, it’s creating a humanizing anchor at the center of the story. Despite some distracting narrative choices and sketchy character development, the film does eventually find its footing. Ultimately Callahan — lovingly, so times complexly portrayed as an anti-hero type with a problematic nature — goes around visiting old friends, seeking closure from people he’s held grudges against for many years. Still, Don’t Worry often feels like the promising debut of an up-and-comer who got lucky with a big-name cast rather than a return-to-form film by someone as esteemed as Van Sant. (Krissten Yoynsoo Kim)

GAUGIN: VOYAGE TO TAHTI

The decision to cast — and keep the camera pointed at — magnetic leading man Vincent Cassel is the most novel aspect of the otherwise staid French biopic Gaugin: Voyage to Tahiti. It’s a Lust for Life—like period drama, following master artist Paul Gaugin as he abandons his wife and children and moves to French Polynesia, convinced that a change in environment will improve his fortune. Cassel (La Haine, Shetan) dominates virtually every shot, except the sequences where his character observes (from off-screen) his paintings’ subjects: the shores of Tahiti as well as his Polynesian mistress/muse Tehura (Tuheu Adams), Director Edouard Deluc and his three co-writers focus on Gaugin’s perspective, often reducing Cassel to an emotional lightning rod for their trite postcolonialist narrative. Even worse is when Gaugin dwells on Tehura’s sexual relationship with his Tahitian apprentice Jotebha (Pua-Tai Hikutini), an affair that never happened in real life. Thankfully, Cassel’s intimating body language — especially his hunched shoulders, halting footsteps and hard stare — often makes Deluc and his collaborators’ version of Gaugin seem real enough. Deluc wisely films Cassel in long takes whenever words seem to fail the artist, as when Cassel glares suspiciously at Mallik Zid’s well-meaning doctor after he warns Gaugin that he must seek treatment back in France following a serious heart attack. Cassel’s Gaugin may ultimately be a lightweight cinematic descendant of the monstrous European pioneers that Klaus Kinski played in Aguirre, the Wrath of God and Fitzcarraldo, but he’s also both menacing and pitiable enough to make Gaugin: Voyage to Tahiti riveting on a moment-to-moment basis. (Simon Abrams)
he's fallen for Madeleine (Jooyette Day), a young woman whose life is touched with scandal. She's got a sugar daddy paying her bills. The mother cannot con- tenance the thought of Michel leaving, and Georges (Marcel Andre), Michel's father, also is shaken: turns out, dad's the sugar daddy. "If there weren't situations like this, there'd be no plays," a family member points out as savorily as anything in his fantasy films. (Alan Scherstuhl)

THE NIGHT EATS THE WORLD (LA NUIT DÉVORÉE LE MONDE)
You'll probably enjoy the French zombie film The Night Eats the World if post-apocalyptic sci-fi like 28 Days Later and The Omega Man are your moviemaking answer to comfort food. Like those same films, this paranoid fantasy gives filmmakers the vicarious thrill of watching a resourceful loner — in this case, American tourist Sam (Anders Danielsen Lie) — wait out the zombie apocalypse inside his Parisian ex-girlfriend's apartment. Unfortunately, the best and worst thing about director Dominique Rocher and his two co-writers' scenario is its familiarity. Sam does everything that everyone, from Vincent Price to Will Smith, has already done to keep sane during an I Am Legend-style crisis. That includes snapping at passing zombies (using a paintball gun) and pathetically de- claring about his fate: "Dead is the new norm now; I'm the one who's not normal." Still, if you don't get too hung up on the film's many contrivances — particularly its uninspired finale and any scene where Lie speaks — you might find The Night Eats the World to be sufficiently moody. That goes double whenever the film's atmosphere is mostly supplied by ambient noises, like the wet clicking of zombies' teeth inside their rotting mouths or the soft thrumming of their distended arms as they smash against shattered windows. There are also a handful of tense zombie encounters, the best of which is the alternately hilarious and terrifying scene where Sam tries to lure an easily distracted cat into his apart- ment. If nothing else, Rocher's film suc- cessfully reaffirms two generic constants: Zombies are terrifying and cats are really, really revolting. (Simon Abrams)

SHOCK AND AWE
Unlike All the President's Men or even The Post, Rob Reiner's Shock and Awe — which tells the story of Knight Rider's Jonathan Landay (Woody Harrelson) and Warren Strobel (James Marsden) finding and printing the truth of the Bush administration's lies during the run-up to the war in Iraq — isn't about veri- similitude. Julia Roberts / Love Trouble is a more convincing portrait of shoe-leather journalism. Instead, Reiner is after some- thing less noble and artistically satisfying but still potent — sometimes even thrill- ing. Shock and Awe is a 90-minute liberal told-you-so, a polemic that, like a long Rachel Maddow segment, is more cheery than thunderous, even as it names the names that must be named. Reiner and his screenwriter, Joey Hartstone, produce the receipts. Reiner rolls-calls through the senators who voted to approve Bush's invasion: Joe Biden, Hillary Clinton, John Kerry, Joseph Lieberman, John McCain. We get a scathing speech about the cor- ruption of Colin Powell, the Bush team's "closer," and Judith Miller of The New York Times gets justifiably tarred as a stenographer of the White House's lies. Reiner's film is jittery at first, uneven in its rhythms, overwrought by its history, corny as Iowa in July. But the second half, which finds Landay and Strobel interrogating sources, often in brisk montage, is score- setting bliss. (They're joined in their quest by a horny, deranged, ultra-edgy Chris Campbell, as Sarah Sawyer, gets to do more than indiscriminate slaughter, showcasing the bit in which Johnson's character, Will Sawyer, leaps from the top of a crane toward a sleek Hong Kong tower's 100th floor. SUPER POWERS AND PUNK ROCK

Brett Gurewitz crosses mediums to spread important messages

BY BRETT CALLWOOD

As the guitarist with L.A. punk vets Bad Religion since their 1980 formation, Brett Gurewitz knows all about just how effective and incendiary subversive art can be. They've written a number of songs covering social issues, contributed a song to Fat Mike (of NOFX)'s Rock Against Bush album, performed at L7's pro-choice event in '93 — Bad Religion have let the world know exactly where they stand, to their enormous credit.

Meanwhile, as the founder of celebrated punk label Epitaph Records, Gurewitz also knows how to run a business, and run it successfully. Add the fact that he's a fan of comic books and it's a no-brainer that, when presented with the opportunity to work with Matteo Pizzolo, he was going to grab it with two hands.

"Matt and I met socially through our wives," Gurewitz says. "Our wives were in prenatal yoga class together when they were pregnant. When our children were born, we were hanging out together all the time. We had a lot in common. He was an old New York hardcore kid, and obviously I have my L.A. hardcore and punk-rock background. So we had a lot of that in common, and we were both into sci-fi and comics, and so when we get together on these family outings with the toddlers, me and Matt would always gravitate to each other."

When Pizzolo created Occupy Comics around the time of the Occupy Wall Street movement, Gurewitz was intrigued; because of his own businesses, he realized that he could help.

"I was not a comic book publisher, but I have a record company and I have another company called Kings Road, which does music merchandise and direct-to-customer business," Gurewitz says. "I thought, well, maybe I can help out. We know how to ship ones and twos and run it successfully. Add the fact that Gurewitz knows how to run a business, and he realized that he could help.

"It costs about the same to make a comic book, it takes about the same amount of time, it's a similar niche customer. So anyway, learning about the business from Matt, I sort of fell into having an understanding of it very naturally."

The two started working together, with Gurewitz's Kings Road shipping out Occupy Comics. For the musician, it was fun and a cause he could get behind. He was proud doing it, plus the experiment was a success. So Gurewitz brought up the idea of doing it again, more regularly, with other books. That was the genesis of Black Mask.

"I'm a sci-fi nerd, and it was the first book we ever put out," he says. "I love the concept because it's so bonkers. It's about a dystopian future where bio-tech has run amok and appliances have consciousness. There's a wannabe bank robber and his sidekick, who's a drug-addicted gun. They're buddies, and sort of anti-heroes. I love that one."

Gurewitz also enjoys Space Riders, We Can Never Go Home Again and Kim & Kim among the Black Mask titles.

"As it turns out, there's a lot of commonality in the comic book business and the indie record business," he continues. "It costs about the same to make a comic book, it takes about the same amount of time, it's a similar niche customer. So anyway, learning about the business from Matt, I sort of fell into having an understanding of it very naturally."

PART OF BLACK MASK'S MISSION IS TO EMPOWER DIVERSE CREATORS. EPITAPH STARTED AS A PUNK ROCK LABEL, AND PART OF WHAT PUNK ROCK IS ABOUT IS TRANSGRESSING AND CHALLENGING SOCIAL NORMS FOR THE BETTERMENT OF SOCIETY.

—BRETT GUREWITZ

Black Mask and Bad Religion/Epitaph.

"Part of Black Mask's mission is to empower diverse creators," he says. "Epitaph started as a punk rock label, and part of what punk rock is about is transgressing and challenging social norms for the betterment of society. Even more than that, a big value of mine is being artist-friendly and, in the case of comic books, being creator-friendly. Not just friendly but sharing ownership of the art with the creators and artists. Epitaph as a punk label was one of the first labels to promote this 'artist first' concept, way back in the late '80s. We've always done that."

Gurewitz has a number of favorite titles within the Black Mask arsenal, with Ballistic (written by Adam Egypt Mortimer with art by Darick Robertson) up there among them.

"I'm a sci-fi nerd, and it was the first book we ever put out," he says. "I love the concept because it's so bonkers. It's about a dystopian future where bio-tech has run amok and appliances have consciousness. There's a wannabe bank robber and his sidekick, who's a drug-addicted gun. He was proud doing it, plus the experiment was a success. So Gurewitz brought up the idea of doing it again, more regularly, with other books. That was the genesis of Black Mask.

"I honestly loved a lot of them," he says. "I guess I will risk being accused of being a philistine here, but I like blockbusters made for 16-year-olds, and I go and see all of them. In my defense, my wife enjoys them too, so we go together. I lucked out in marrying somebody with an equally pedestrian love of film. I loved the new Avengers: Infinity War — I thought it was fantastic. Of the Deadpool movies, I thought the first was phenomenal. I'm a huge fan of the first Guardians of the Galaxy. All of them are flawed, none of them are perfect, but I loved Wonder Woman. I thought Black Panther was an important film, if flawed also."

Gurewitz won't be at San Diego Comic-Con this year — he'll be out of the country — but he's happy that there's a strong Black Mask presence at the event. Meanwhile, he'll be continuing to inform and educate with his band. Bad Religion just put out a single called "The Kids Are Alright."

"It's a scathing indictment of the conservative youth movement," Gurewitz says. "And we have a brilliant lyrics video done by a young Spanish artist named Antoni Sendra (aka Podenco) — he's a phenomenal visual artist. We're writing for a new album, recording this fall or late summer. No release date announced yet, but we should have an album's worth of 'Fuck Trump' songs pretty soon. It's exactly what we need."

And whatever medium he's working with, that's exactly what we'll get.

The Coathangers

@ RESIDENT DTLA

With President Trump set to appoint a new judge to the Supreme Court and further tilt that institution even further to the right, the name Coathangers suddenly becomes relevant again as women’s rights advocates fear the reversal of Roe v. Wade. The Coathangers — the band — embody the frustrations and rage many people are feeling these days. On their new concert recording Live, which was recorded over two nights last year at Alex’s Bar, the Atlanta punk trio have their silly, goofy moments as singer-guitarist Julia Kugel manipulates a squeaky toy on “Squeeki Tiki.” But even that track, which rides along Meredith Franco’s rubbery, spooky style bass lines and Stephanie Luke’s primal drumming, is full of unrestrained rage as the toy is used as a sarcastic kiss-off to “a bad memory.” Other highlights range from Franco’s “Burn Me” to Luke’s “Adderall.”

Melvins

@ THE TROUBADOUR

He likely never intended it this way but, at this point, King Buzzo’s incredible hair is as iconic a rock & roll vision as KISS’ makeup or Angus Young’s schoolboy uniform. It’s a thing of ungodly beauty, and it’s only gotten more pleasing to the eye as he’s aged and the bonnet has grayed. That said, the Melvins have never been about gimmicks but, rather, bone-tremblingly intense stoner punk music that has remained monolithically uncompromising but simultaneously ecstatic enough to draw in fans of both grunge and grindcore, and everything in between. The Melvins are a force of nature. Incredibly prolific down the years, they put out the Pinkus Abortion Technician album in April of this year. Their cover of the Beatles’ “I Want to Hold Your Hand” is worth the price of the record alone.

Body/Head

@ HOLLYWOOD FOREVER CEMETERY

In their later years, Sonic Youth evolved from a fearsome collective of noise noisemakers into a relatively mellow and more typical alt-rock band. Bassist Kim Gordon’s sullenly restrained vocals and skeletal bass lines often were the most intriguing aspect of the New York group as they settled comfortably into their more pop-minded, easy-listening phase. She has returned to her roots in experimentation with Body/Head, her ongoing project with guitarist Bill Nace. While some of the selections on the duo’s new Matador Records release The Switch occasionally echo the woozy, fuzzy intensity of early Sonic Youth, Body/Head stubbornly explore even stranger musical territory. Such convulsive tracks as “Change My Brain” and “Reverse Hard” clock in at over 10 minutes apiece, and the duo’s occasional cryptic vocals are buried in layers of crushing guitars and avant-garde sound effects.

Triple-B Records showcase

@ HI-HAT

Dip yourself in the warm seamy goodness of modern American hardcore music at today’s Triple-B Records showcase for some of the bands you might have missed in the sweltering welter that was this year’s Sound and Fury Festival. There’s the vegan straight-edge majesty of Ecostrike, meditating loudly and forcefully on what lessons there were to be learned from the strife and chaos of the ’90s; French breakbeat pioneer Candy; Atlanta hardcore from Abuse of Power, with their impressively philosophical theme that he explored on Grey Crow, but he also delves into the redemptive power of friendship on “Hey You.” Elsewhere, Eligh collaborates with his frequent musical partner The Grouch (“Focused,” “Pain on the Break”) and Dilated People’s Evidence (“Burn”). “When the fire burns hot inside, this man knows he’s alive,” he muses. “The speaker knows the power of the language.” Often celebrated for his work with The Grouch and as part of the rap supergroup Living Legends, Eligh reveals more of his inner world when he goes solo.

Eligh

@ THE ROXY

“No pill can give me pleasure like the present,” Eligh declares on “Last House on the Block,” the title track of his latest solo album. “I’m looking out my body like a window sill/it’s like a drill into my temple, just to make a thought to something simple.” The local rapper continues the theme of recovery from drug addiction that he explored on Grey Crow, but he also delves into the redemptive power of friendship on “Hey You.” Elsewhere, Eligh collaborates with his frequent musical partner The Grouch (“Focused,” “Pain on the Break”) and Dilated People’s Evidence (“Burn”). “When the fire burns hot inside, this man knows he’s alive,” he muses. “The speaker knows the power of the language.” Often celebrated for his work with The Grouch and as part of the rap supergroup Living Legends, Eligh reveals more of his inner world when he goes solo.

@ WHISKY A GO-GO
A band featuring former L.A. Guns (and Black Cherry) singer Paul Black, and Dogs D’amour guitarist Jo Dog, isn’t necessarily going to thrill too many people in 2018. Black isn’t considered as important an ingredient in L.A. Guns’ history as Phil Lewis, despite the fact that his tenure in that band predates Lewis’. Meanwhile, English sleaze-blues rockers The Dogs D’amour were always a cult band on this side of the Atlantic. So we’re looking at two overlooked ’80s rock musicians joining forces. The thing is, their Sun Down and Yellow Moon album from 2000 is an underrated gem. Magic happens when you get these two in a room together, not least because they’re both excellent musicians and songwriters. Hollywood sleaze-punk vets Motorcycle Boy also play. – Brett Callwood

Joe Budden
@ THE REGENCY THEATER
A former member of the hip-hop supergroup Slaughterhouse, Joe Budden has since made a name for himself as one of the most outspoken voices in hip-hop and rap culture. Anyone who recognizes the name will know the New York rap veteran has no filter, especially when it comes to his Twitter fingers. After a very successful run as a host on Complex News’ Everyday Struggle, Joe now has his own self-titled podcast, The Joe Budden Podcast, with co-hosts Rory and Mal. Entertaining listeners around the world, it was only right he embark on his own tour. We’re just glad he’s coming through L.A. – Shirley Ju

Corinne Bailey Rae, Seal
@ HOLLYWOOD BOWL
Since the release of her self-titled debut album in February 2006, British singer-songwriter-producer-guitarist Corinne Bailey Rae has been one of the hottest properties in contemporary R&B. Writing songs that are deeply personal, easily relatable, beautiful and heartfelt, she continued to earn accolades with 2010 sophomore album The Sea, which was conceived in the wake of her husband’s 2008 death. 2016’s The Heart Speaks in Whispers is her most recent album, and it’s typically poignant. This show at the Hollywood Bowl sees her playing before Seal, who is performing Rat Pack standards with members of the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra. So, if you have a hankering to hear Seal singing “My Way” or “Fly Me to the Moon,” this is the gig for you. – Brett Callwood

Stephen Malkmus & the Jicks
@ THE ROXY
Stephen Malkmus came to attention as a member of alt-rock icons Pavement, but his presumed side project with The Jicks has been going on for nearly 20 years. The Portland, Oregon, group’s latest album, Sparkle Hard, encompasses the momentous opener “Cast Off,” which moves from an austere piano-laden introduction into surging waves of guitar, and more brightly poppy tunes like “Future Suite,” which is coated in a veneer of sparkly glitter. “Bike Lane” is a more anthemic, guitar-based number that is introspective and contemplative as well. Malkmus croons sentimentally, “Crush me back to where I belong.” While the band will be part of a big bill at the Greek Theatre with Courtney Barnett and Waxahatchee in October, tonight’s a chance to see them in a more intimate venue. – Falling James
