THE GREAT PARTY AT MICHAEL'S AND A GARDEN PARTY AT UBUNTU

BY MICHELE STUEVEN

Michael's Santa Monica, which opened in 1979 and helped kickstart the California cuisine movement, will celebrate 45 Years with a special anniversary tasting event on Sunday, April 21 benefiting Share Our Strength's No Kid Hungry Campaign.

The Great Party will take place at the restaurant on April 21 from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. and will feature many of the celebrated chefs who have cooked at Michael's over the years. Participating chefs, led by Michael's current Executive Chef Job Carder include Nancy Silverton of Osteria Mozza, Pizzeria Mozza, Chi Spacca, Jonathan Waxman (Barbuto), Sang Yoon, (Father's Office) Brooke Williamson (Playa Provisions), Brian Bornemann (Crudo e Nudo, Isla), and Mikey Stern from Sunset Tower, Sony and Wolfgang Puck Catering just to name a few.

The culinary tasting journey will include dishes from the chefs, who will be cooking at various stations throughout the restaurant in its romantic garden and bar. The menu will feature both classics from the restaurant's storied history, as well as new creations from the chefs inspired by their time at Michael's. Tickets cost $250, and proceeds will benefit No Kid Hungry, the organization dedicated to eradicating childhood hunger.

On the south side of Santa Monica, the bakery wars are heating up on Ocean Park Blvd. with Jyan Isaac Bread upping the game against next-door neighbor Layla Bagels with the addition of some mind-blowing pastries in its new storefront. Adding to the popular line of Jyan Issac's artisan bread and bagels in the two-year-old shop, the young baker added a line of classic Viennese-style breakfast pastries including seasonal fruit Danishes and a variety of croissants like an incomparable pain au chocolat this week.

Hotel Bel-Air will debut new cake decorating classes, starting Wednesday, April 24 with a Cake Decorating Showdown. Hotel Bel-Air's Pastry Chef and U.S. Chocolate Master Christophe Rull from Netflix's Bake Squad and his team will offer an adults-only 21 and over cake decorating contest which includes a glass of champagne, chef hat, apron, and a decorated cake to take home. Additional classes will launch throughout the year and will take place in The Restaurant. The price is $200 per person.

A new jazz night series called Velvet Moon Jazz kicks off at RDEN this week in partnership with GillesSignature. These jazz nights run Thursday to Sunday from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. with notable talents including Chris Norton, Rhythm and Soul LA, CJ Emmons, Lyndsay, and the All-Nighters. Here's the schedule:

- Thursday, April 18
Chris Norton
- Friday, April 19
Rhythm and Soul LA
- Saturday, April 20
CJ Emmons
- Sunday, April 21
Lyndsay and the All-Nighters

Michelin-starred modern French bistro, Camphor, and Eatly Los Angeles are teaming up on Thursday, April 18, for a special evening in honor of Eatly's first-ever pasta line. As part of the guest chef series at Capri, Camphor's Co-Executive Chefs, Max Boonthanakit and Lijo George will feature a four-course meal created in collaboration with Eatly chefs to celebrate the pasta launch. Menu highlights include plenty of pasta, sea bream and uni tart, crusted trout with asparagus and a lemon saffron sauce, and marzipan sorbet and lemon granita for dessert. Reservations from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m. are priced at $85 per person and can be made on OpenTable.

Ubuntu, the plant-based restaurant inspired by West African ingredients and helmed by 2022 James Beard Award semifinalist Shenarri Freeman, is launching "TwentyTues," a weekly offering of a curated menu of $22 bottles of wine for guests dining on the lush patio alongside signature dishes including palm bisque and curry Jollof arancini. The garden party is available on Tuesdays from 5 p.m. to 10 p.m.

Shirley Brasserie at the Hollywood Roosevelt Hotel is partnering with award-winning chefs from around the world to launch a collaborative dinner series, Tale of Two Cities. The series will kick off on Wednesday, April 24 and Thursday, April 25 from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m., where Michelin-starred Chef Yuu Shimano from Restaurant YUU in Brooklyn, New York, will join Shirley's Chef de Cuisine, Craig Hopson, for a multi-course experience merging Japanese and French cultures. Reservations can be made via Eventbrite, at $135 per person. Menu highlights include Californian jumbo white asparagus served atop aged parmesan fondue, half of a grilled quail, Abalone broth risotto, lamb saddle roll and black tea savarin with blood orange sauce.

The series continues with Yuu Shimano, the Michelin-starred Chef of Restaurant YUU in New York, Mads Refslund, chef and co-founder of Noma in Copenhagen and ILIS in New York in May, Brazilian-based Michelin-starred chef Thomas Troisgros of Toto, Oseille, and Olympe and Sylvestre Wahid, the two Michelin-starred chefs behind Restaurant Sylvestre and Alya's by SW in France.

TV Watch: Executive Producer Guy Fieri calls upon his pal Noah Cappe to help find the Best Bite In Town on the new Food Network series that premiered on Friday, April 12 at 9 p.m. In each episode, Cappe assembles a Bite Club, featuring two chefs including Tiffani Faison, Shota Nakajima, Joe Sasto, Aarti Sequeira, and Jet Tila. Together, they explore the local food scene in cities across the country, visiting six of the most popular spots in each one. After scouring the town and tasting a wide variety of cuisines, Noah and the Bite Club nominate three exceptional dishes to present to a panel of culinary judges to determine the Best Bite In Town. California cities include Davis and Placerville. [E]

FRESH NUGS OF BEL AIR

Xzibit scores coveted Bel Air retail cannabis permit

BY JIMI DEVINE

The stars aligned for Xzibit as he celebrated the soft opening of Xzibit's West Coast Cannabis in Bel Air.

Let's just start with, thank God.

There is an argument to be made this will end up being one of the most valuable retail sites in Los Angeles and the world when using the zip code standard. That means the higher the median income in a zip code, the more disposable income they have to spend on cannabis for recreational purposes. It's not an exact science, but it's not too "out there of a concept," so I've always found it to be a reasonable talking point as dispensaries have moved from the industrial tracts on the edge of town to places like Bel Air, as cannabis continues to get further normalized.

Someone who has spent their whole life participating in cannabis at every level getting that permit and not some douche-bag chad is pretty cool.

Xzibit is right at the top of the list of famed L.A. cannabis enthusiasts. Apart from being the GOAT custom car show host, he also did the Up in Smoke tour with the only LA rapper more associated with weed in pop culture than him, Snoop Dogg. The bike he rode around the stage on the tour is parked in the middle of the shop.

It's easy to understand why the shop's announcement about its recent soft opening has been getting a solid reception from all, ahead of its official grand opening party later this month, is sure to be a banger given Xzibit's list of friends.

We chatted with Xzibit last week to get the details on the build-up to him becoming LA's newest dispensary owner.

"I always knew that retail was going to be a big part of building what I wanted to see in cannabis. And it just came together now with a group I'm working with that also saw the vision," Xzibit told L.A. Weekly. "And so when this opportunity came up, I thought this is the perfect piece, in the perfect place to launch Xzibit's West Coast Cannabis Retail!"

Xzibit was quick to remind all his original dealings in cannabis were more branding deals. After initially dipping his toes in the cartridge scene, he pulled back for a few years to game up even further. When he launched his second brand, Napalm, he was able to be a lot more hands-on with the process, just like he was in the studio with the album he named it after.

He felt the Napalm heat metaphor was solid, and given he'd already had an album of the same name, it was an obvious no-brainer. Napalm weathered a quick storm early with some people who weren't approving of that metaphor for heat being used to describe his flowers, but the clouds settled quickly. Now three years removed from the launch, Napalm can be found in some of the state's bigger retail chains like Cookies and Stizzy.

Napalm became vertically integrated with its flower production after the successful launch. Xzibit's new shop serves as the final step in securing his dream of a true West Coast-inspired farm-to-consumer experience. But before he had that final piece of the puzzle, he'd already seen Napalm picked up by the distribution arm of the chocolate powerhouse Kiva.

As for what he's about to do in Bel Air, he has had his hands deep in every part of the process as he hoped to create a Hard Rock Hotel meets West Coast theme ethos for the shop.

"It is crazy and it's a huge, huge opportunity," Xzibit said of his prime real estate. "I'm very thankful for the city for working with us and seeing the vision that we had and realizing that we were the perfect fit for this location."

As with most things in cannabis, these things take a while. But honestly we were pretty surprised when Xzibit said it only took a year to make this happen, given the struggles so many people have had with licensing in Los Angeles.

He further argued the vision is what won Bel Air over.

"This is not the regular dispensary. This is a celebration of the West Coast and everyone in it," Xzibit explained. "Not just West Coast hip hop. Rap music in itself was a celebration of West Coast culture, our neighborhoods, our beaches, our car culture, our music and entertainment culture is the celebration of everything. Everyone is included."

Xzibit has had his eyes on California cannabis since the medical era and watched his company survive the culling of recent years, where many companies didn't make it. He says with everything he has witnessed from overtaxation to too many regulations, he truly believes people are now starting to see the benefits of the plant, after so many people gave so much time and energy to get us here.

Xzibit argues the further we can normalize the medicinal aspects of cannabis, the better off we'll be. But reminding people they won't end up in a cage anymore is important too, given how many people had lived under prohibition for most of their lives

"Like being able to understand that they won't get in difficulty or legal troubles for having access to the plant," Xzibit said.

We asked Xzibit if he agrees with some assessments that California has seen the worst of it over the past few years. The survivors left are mostly in a holding pattern waiting for access to wider markets.

"I do think it is a fair assessment," Xzibit replied. "I do think that the people that are still holding on doing things correctly here in the state of California are the winners. They're the ones that are going to have the outstanding brands that stand the test of time."

He pointed to the alcohol companies that survived prohibition as an inspiration. He found Jim Beam, a company founded in 1795, to be an excellent example.

"These 150-year-old brands that survived the ups and downs and topsy turvy of what was happening at the moment and now they're still here to this day," Xzibit said. "So I look to that for inspiration. And I look for, you know, the same kind of fairness and a calmness of regulations once things get into the future."

Xzibit went on to speak to the impact cannabis has on spreading West Coast culture as a whole. Many would argue rap and cannabis are two of the biggest drivers of the love for California culture abroad.

"So just like the produce that comes out of California is preferred, it'd be the same thing with the cannabis," Xzibit said.

Now all his focus is looking toward April 28, the day of the shop's official grand opening. When asked what the first lesson he's learned so far as a cannabis retailer, Xzibit laughed and said make sure you have parking.

We asked Xzibit what he is smoking besides Napalm these days. He was quick to point to Ted's Bud Co., Connected, and 710 as some of his favorites before putting LA locals Originals on that list, too.

Xzibit's West Coast Cannabis is now open at 641 N. Sepulveda Blvd. Delivery and curbside pickup are both available. The shop is open from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., every day. They're about 100 Google reviews in, and people seem to be loving it.

One reviewer noted, "Beautiful store, wow Xzibit!! The budtenders know their stuff, and it just feels cool to be in the place and talk cannabis with friendly people. Highly recommend, easy to access off the 405 and jump right back on. You have to see the shop for yourself to truly experience a game changer in the culture. Best of luck to the team, welcome to the neighborhood." 🙌

LA CANNABIS GENETICS GO GLOBAL

Local cannabis genetics are hotter than ever as new cannabis markets continue to come online both at home and abroad

BY JIMI DEVINE

Cannabis bred in Los Angeles being amongst the best in the world is nothing new, but the current level of accessibility is taking things to the next level.

When cannabis strains depart in America, it usually happens in waves. The Europeans would hear about the new heat from California. First, they wanted to get their hands on the OGs, DNA Genetics delivered the Kosher Kush feeding the beast, next they wanted Cookies and Gelatos after the dessert weed movement kicked off on the West Coast. Then they moved on to the Zs.

There is still a ton of Z flying all over the world these days, but post-pandemic, a lot of Los Angeles flavors have started to climb the hype list as people attempt to get their hands on our exceptional local genetics.

One of the people helping curate the rise of L.A. flavors abroad has been Doja Pak founder Ryan Bartholomew.

While Doja Pak originally was founded in Sacramento, the brand's success drove him to move south to Los Angeles where he's only further helped uplift exotic cannabis in the community. Many of the strains Bartholomew has worked with in recent years have become "must haves" all over the world starting with the success of the DEO-bred RS11 in 2020 and onto his recent Permanent Marker work with Seed Junky, where they're starting to now dive a bit more into the backcrosses.

"I guess that if you were looking at this from an external standpoint, you would look at the stuff that I'm rolling out as being LA flavors as well, because I'm from LA, so even though my seeds and stuff are being produced up north, a lot of the stuff that we're putting out is actually grown in LA, right?" Bartholomew told L.A. Weekly. "I think LA is the hottest place in the world for cannabis, number one. I think that the genetics that are being created here and rolled out here are what's on the center stage of what people want all over the world."

Bartholomew has also been an access point for those genetics with massive clone drops in Los Angeles and seed drops in Barcelona. We asked what it's been like watching the accessibility level to elite genetics evolve over the last few years to the point where you can grab cuttings of his selections after they've served their time with Doja Pak.

"I think it was a good idea. A lot of people benefited from it as well. You see guys growing LA genetics in Prague, Czech Republic, wherever they may be," Bartholomew said. "It's cool to see people being able to thrive in their local communities with some genetics that are above par with those people who are used to smoking."

Bartholomew emphasized that the quality of gear he has spread around the world has always been things he would or did work with.

"We thought it was the stuff that was special out of the stuff that we were pulling from, so we're selecting for what I consider to be the best stock and then they just get to reap the benefits of that, whenever we do these,” he said. He believes one of the reasons people have been so receptive of the drops is because they know they’ll be able to get straight to the point.

A lot of the genetics from LA moving around the world right now are traced back to Masonic Seed Company in Compton. A combination of four years of Free Seed Day and Masonic becoming a regular at Spannabis before most of this generation of American breeders has seen his work with Wilson take off in Europe. When we visited Denmark last fall, the best cannabis we saw on the trip was a Mindflayer x Wilson crossed by Masonic.

“I think people are looking for all the Wizard Trees and Seed Junky crossed back and forth right now type of stuff,” Masonic told LA Weekly. “I think that’s what the collective conscience as far as just general consumers, that’s what they’re agreed on. That’s the terp right there.”

We asked Masonic if those people were trying to get the commercial viability of Seed Junky with the new flavor profiles from Wizard Trees?

“Yeah. I think it’s that Seed Junky gas with the Candy from Wizard Trees,” said of his all-the-rage flavor of the moment.

As for his own work that’s popular abroad, he said everything always leads back to the Wilson he bred in 2017.

“I think the Wilson by itself because of the namesake and the flagship that it made,” Masonic said when asked which of his flavors gets the most hype, “people kind of little by little started looking for cuts of it or whatever, seeing if any person had and they kind of just started running it and it took a couple of years.”

He always gets a kick out of people telling him how much they love it, on his travels.

“For me to see people be like ‘Yo, I really really liked the Wilson and it almost kind of had me turn my head like, man, what do you mean, like the Wilson has been around? I made it in 2017. You’re telling me 2023. So it’s kind of like that’s why I see like Wilson is a common denominator,” Masonic said. “It’s never any random hybrid that I’ve made because I’ve made 1,000s of hybrids. Wilson itself has made the most of ripple.”

Last weekend saw Masonic host the fourth annual Free Seed Day. He and his family helped organize getting over 1,000 free bags to the community. This year’s event was bigger than ever as he had more room to accommodate vendors than when he was still doing it at his shop. 🌿

GREAT PRETENDERS: SPIES, PRETTY LITTLE LIARS, AND CHARMING SOCIOPATHS

UnBinged reviews three series featuring swindlers, moles, and sinister striplings, as people from different eras, backgrounds, and regions find reasons to play pretend.

BY ERIN MAXWELL

The Sympathizer (HBO/Max)

A spy known simply as the Captain attempts to play both sides of the Vietnam War, but in Max's adaptation of Viet Thanh Nguyen's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, The Sympathizer, his loyalties are as blurred as the politics that surround the conflict itself.

Created by acclaimed director Park Chan-wook and writer Don McKellar, the story of a Communist turncoat is transformed into a compelling series about self-identity, with a commentary on the atrocities of war. A complex narrative told through the POV of an unnamed half-Vietnamese, half-Caucasian Trotskyite operative, the series recounts his time as a high-ranking mole in the South Vietnamese army, his escape after the fall of Saigon, his time in Hollywood working for the film industry, and, finally, his capture and imprisonment.

Framed as a confession written from solitary confinement, Hoa Xuande's Captain is the focus of this satirical period piece, which gets progressively darker as it continues, until ultimately embracing the full brutality of war. The success of the adaptation hinges on Xuande's brilliant performance.

Similar to other villain protagonists, like Breaking Bad's Walter White or Death Note's Light Yagami, the narrator is an antihero who strongly believes he is the white knight of his story, despite the nefariousness of his acts. As our guide through absurd and deeply upsetting circumstances, Xuande perfectly delivers the narrator's sardonic point of view, to create a morose anti-war send-up with moments that are difficult to forget.

Aiding him along the way is a supporting cast of heavy hitters, including a shapeshifting Robert Downey Jr., who channels his best Peter Sellers to play different roles, including the character of Professor Hammer, the head of "oriental studies" at Occidental College who fetishizes Asian culture, and Claude, the CIA operative who is both mentor and overseer for the narrator, allowing the former Iron Man to formally enter his Award Era as the heavy for the series. Other notable performances, from Sandra Oh, Toan Le, and Fred Nguyen Khan, as best friend Bon, help complete the thought-provoking tale.

The Sympathizer's ability to evoke the narrator's conflicts for the audience is as compelling as the lunatic story itself. Driving the tale is Xuande's riveting performance as a spy who must be many things, except himself. The story of The Sympathizer is not the journey of a hero but an elevated narrative driven by a gray morality that blends macabre humor with the inhumanity of war to tell an outlandish spy story unlike any other.

Ripley (Netflix)

If Netflix's Ripley proves anything, it is that Andrew Scott is a force to be reckoned with. If you missed the Irish actor as the scene-stealing, disco-loving Moriarty in Sherlock, as the knee-weakening priest in Fleabag, or in his underappreciated turn in All of Us Strangers, Netflix has been kind enough to provide yet another spectacle in which Scott can dazzle. This time around, he takes on the role of iconic swindler Tom Ripley.

This adaptation of Patricia Highsmith's The Talented Mr. Ripley creates a more foreboding retelling than previous efforts. Set in the 1960s, Ripley is barely getting by in New York as a scam artist when the father of an old acquaintance engages his services, asking that he try to convince his frivolous son Dickie Greenleaf (Johnny Flynn) to return home from Italy. Little does he realize the danger he has placed in his son's path as Ripley sets up shop in Dickie's life. Imagine IRL swindlers Anna Delvey or Billy McFarland, if they operated on bloodlust instead of Twitter.

Through a meticulous execution of the material, series creator Steven Zaillian gives Ripley the noir treatment the story so richly deserves. Scott slips into the role of Ripley effortlessly and is particularly skillful as he interacts with his prey, Dickie. Flynn's portrayal as the charismatic man-child is mesmerizing, highlighting everything Ripley is not: jovial, vivacious, and native to the privileged class that Ripley so desperately wants to join. Additional players Dakota Fanning and Eliot Sumner are formidable as Ripley's adversaries, going head-to-head with the monster when Dickie goes missing.

With all eight episodes scripted and directed by Zaillian, almost every scene is framed as if it were wall-worthy of the Guggenheim. Shot in black and white, the starkness removes any sense of light or hope that a cheery Italian beachfront might provide, while adding a sense of timelessness to the content.

In Ripley, Zaillian creates high art from thriller noir. The depth of the performances blend with the artistry of the direction and cinematography to allow the story to shine. Scott's take on the low-key sociopath adds a level of menace that is truly terrifying, highlighted by Flynn's understated and savvy performance. The overall effect has viewers on the edge of their seats, even if they know how the story ends.

Under the Bridge (Hulu/FX)

After a winning streak that includes top-notch content with the retelling of your mother's favorite miniseries Shōgun and the historical high-society scandals of Feud: Capote vs. the Swans, Hulu and FX march forward with an adaptation that centers on the most menacing phenomenon ever to terrorize mankind: an angry pack of 14-year-old girls.

Based on the late Rebecca Godfrey's true-crime book of the same name, Under the Bridge is the fact-based story of every parent's worst nightmare. The tale of a missing 14-year-old uncovers a secret, sinister world of juvenile girls, where having nothing to do in the middle of nowhere usually means nothing good. Here we find teen girls who want to be gangsters, and wield violence when boredom gets the better of them.

A muted version of Larry Clark's Bully, the horror of the tale centers on the young teens that populate the Seven Oaks Youth Home, who are accused and later stand trial for the murder of Reena Virk (Vritika Gupta). Oscar-nominee Lily Gladstone steps into the role of Officer Cam Bentland, the only police officer who takes the disappearance of Reena seriously, while Riley Keough plays author Godfrey, who, while researching a book about her past, gets pulled into the drama.

Gladstone and Keough bear a large brunt of the work, as seasoned pros in a miniseries mostly dominated by a Gen Z cast. Their relationships with the teens and each other are easily the best parts of the series. Archie Panjabi also shines as Reena's overbearing mother, helping to paint a picture of the troubled teen's suffocating home life. But while the adult cast is solid, the depictions of these troubled teens and guileless bullies come off as flat, fairly standard tropes. Only the character of Reena is fleshed out, thanks to Gupta's elevated performance, but her erstwhile chums are not as convincing. In addition to issues with the teen characterizations, the series suffers from overall repetition in tone and mood, making it feel monotonous. There is no joy in this town. No humor and no love. Just anger, pain, sorrow, and guilt, so there is very little to endear the viewer to most, if any, of the characters.

Under the Bridge is a sufficient adaptation of powerful source material that reminds most viewers why junior high is hell. However, the minimal character development given to the young cast that is central to the story, and the lack of contrasting emotions hinder the production. Though the performances from both Gladstone and Keough occasionally help dig the series out of an overarching ennui, viewer interest might taper off sooner than expected. [F]

CELEBRATE 4/20 WITH A BOWL OF KANCHA BOAT NOODLE AND TOASTY SUBS

BY MICHELE STUEVEN

Boat Noodle

COURTESY AYARA THAI.

Americans know Korean BBQ and they know Shabu. But not nearly as many know Moo Krata. Ayara Thai in Westchester brings back the unique Thai dining experience several times each year, in celebration of Songkran, Thai New Year, which is observed in April. Following three nights of Moo Krata, Ayara Thai will offer Kancha Boat Noodle, a hearty and traditionally cannabis-infused soup, on Friday, April 19.

One of Thailand's most famous and labor-intensive soups, Ayara's Boat Noodle is simmered for 48 hours and has 30 ingredients including pandan leaves, galangal, pickled lime, fermented tofu, dark soy sauce, tri-tip braised beef and, of course, the classic 420-forward ingredient, cannabis, which historically was used to tenderize the meat. Chef Vanda Asapahu is planning to use a hybrid indica/sativa strain to create the combo of feeling good and relaxation. Each bowl will contain 5mg.

Each low-dose bowl will be available on the street in front of Ayara on Friday night for $24 each, until sold out. Top it off with CBD-infused chili vinegar and crispy pork rinds, and be sure to designate a driver or utilize rideshare. Available to enjoy on-site or pickup for takeout. Patio seating is first-come, first-served. To dine indoors, reservations are encouraged.

Moo Krata

COURTESY AYARA THAI.

The Moo Krata meal takes place on Thursday, April 18, with outdoor seatings at 5:30 p.m. and 8 p.m. It's $200 for a table for four, including tax and 20% service charge. Heated by Thai-style binchotan charcoal, the raised dome is similar to a Korean BBQ grill, and the curved edge is a soup hotpot similar to Shabu.

THE MEAL INCLUDES:

→ MEATS – Snake River Farm wagyu ribeye, marinated tri-tip, marinated Snake River Farm kurobuta pork loin, pork jowl, fish cakes, scallops, shrimp and crab

→ VEGGIES – Napa cabbage, Ong Choy morning glory, spinach, carrots, enoki mushrooms and tofu

→ BROTH – lemongrass, galangal, daikon pork broth

→ DIPPING SAUCES – Thai-style sukiyaki, chili-lime, When Tigers Cry, and Jaew with roasted chili and toasted rice powder

→ SIDES – Jasmine rice, glass noodles, instant Mama noodles

→ DESSERT – Bua Loy rice dumplings in coconut milk

Cannabis-themed toasted sub shop Cheba Hut is a good place to cure the munchies with a toasty menu and a bar to ease the burden of cottonmouth. There will be Nug subs (4 inch sandwiches) for $4.20 all day long on Saturday, April 20, as well as free Cheba Hut-branded frisbees and Lowrider Amplified cocktails from Cypress Hill. 🍪

CANNABIS

CANNABIS TERMS
GUIDE 2024

BY LA WEEKLY STAFF

IMAGE VIA UNSPLASH

It's 2024, and the days of your bleary-eyed weed dealer handing you two indistinguishable sacks he vaguely calls "kush" or "diesel" are but a strange, distant memory. If you walk into a dispensary today, you'll encounter weed products with so many descriptors and breakdowns, you'll feel like you're failing AP Chem all over again. To help sort you through the confusion, we've put together a quick and handy guide to the technical terms you'll encounter on your next weed visit. That way you can save your brain space for the bigger things — like say, aliens.

THE BASICS

A few terms you probably know, but just in case — Indica, Sativa and Hybrid. Indica, sativa, and hybrid are terms used to classify different types of cannabis plants based on their physical characteristics, effects, and origins. Here's a breakdown of each:

Indica:

Short, bushy plants with broad leaves, known for relaxing and sedating effects, often used for nighttime use or to relieve insomnia, anxiety, and pain.

Sativa:

Tall, slender plants with thin leaves, associated with energizing and uplifting effects, commonly used during the day for creativity, focus, and mood enhancement.

Hybrid:

Crossbreed of indica and sativa, offering a mix of characteristics and effects. Hybrids can vary widely depending on genetics, but they generally provide a balanced or nuanced experience, suitable for a range of preferences and needs.

It's worth noting that the terms "indica" and "sativa" have been used traditionally to describe the physical characteristics and geographical origins of cannabis plants, but modern cannabis breeding has led to a significant overlap in these classifications. Many strains on the market today are hybrids, and the effects of a particular strain can vary based on factors such as genetics, growing conditions, and individual tolerance. As a result, some experts argue that the indica/sativa classification system is not always reliable for predicting the effects of a strain and that it's more useful to consider the specific cannabinoid and terpene profiles of a strain for a more accurate understanding of its potential effects.

THC

THC, or delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol, is the main psychoactive compound found in cannabis. It's responsible for the "high" or intoxicating effects that users experience when consuming cannabis. Beyond its recreational use, THC also has potential medicinal properties, including pain relief, nausea reduction, and appetite stimulation.

CBD

CBD, short for cannabidiol, is a non-intoxicating cannabinoid found in cannabis plants. Unlike THC, CBD does not produce a "high" or euphoric effect. It has gained popularity for its potential therapeutic benefits, including pain relief, anxiety reduction, and anti-inflammatory properties. CBD is commonly used in various forms, such as oils, tinctures, capsules, and topical creams, for a range of health and wellness purposes.

— MORE COMPLICATED CHEMISTRY —

Getting a little more advanced, cannabis plants have dozens, if not over 100 chemical compounds beyond THC and CBD. Here are some of the most popular varieties of cannabinoids you may encounter:

Cannabinol (CBN):

CBN has gained attention for its potential sedative effects and is often associated with aiding sleep. It's usually found in aged cannabis products as THC degrades into CBN over time.

Cannabigerol (CBG):

CBG is considered a precursor to other cannabinoids and is often found in low concentrations in cannabis strains. It has been researched for its potential anti-inflammatory, antibacterial, and neuroprotective properties.

Tetrahydrocannabivarin (THCV):

THCV is structurally similar to THC but produces different effects. It's been studied for its potential appetite-suppressing and energizing properties.

Cannabichromene (CBC):

CBC is another lesser-known cannabinoid that has gained attention for its potential anti-inflammatory, analgesic, and antidepressant effects.

Cannabidivarin (CBDV):

CBDV is similar to CBD but with a shorter side chain. It has been researched for its potential anti-epileptic properties and may also have therapeutic effects in other neurological conditions.

— CONCENTRATES —

Beyond cannabis as a flower, there's a world of marijuana concentrates to consume in a variety of forms, including through weed vapes and "dabs" — that's like hitting a bong, but with a concentrate.

Hashish:

One of the oldest forms of cannabis concentrate, hashish is made by compressing the resin glands (trichomes) of cannabis plants. It can be in the form of a solid block or a paste.

Hash Oil:

Also known as cannabis oil or BHO (butane hash oil), hash oil is extracted using solvents like butane or CO<sub>2</sub>. It's a potent concentrate often used for dabbing or vaporizing.

Wax:

Wax is a sticky, crumbly concentrate with a texture similar to beeswax. It's made by extracting cannabinoids and terpenes from cannabis using solvents like butane or CO<sub>2</sub>.

Shatter:

Shatter is a translucent, glass-like concentrate that breaks or "shatters" into pieces when handled. It's produced using similar extraction methods as wax but is processed differently to achieve its unique texture.

Live Resin:

Live resin is made by freezing freshly harvested cannabis plants and extracting cannabinoids and terpenes while they're still frozen. This preserves the plant's natural terpene profile, resulting in a flavorful concentrate.

Rosin:

Rosin is a solventless concentrate made by applying heat and pressure to cannabis flower or hash, causing the cannabinoids and terpenes to "squeeze" out. It's considered a more natural alternative to solvent-based concentrates.

Distillate:

Cannabis distillate is a highly refined concentrate produced through distillation, which separates cannabinoids and terpenes from other plant compounds. It's often used to create infused products like edibles or vape cartridges.

— EDIBLES —

Last but not least, any dispensary worth its salt will have a variety of edibles. Between candies, baked goods, snacks and drinks, you'll find an endless options of edible goods that will get you properly high. All the chemical compounds mentioned above apply to edibles, so in choosing what kind of edible to go for, it's more of a taste preference — they'll all mostly get you high the same.

So now that you've been caught up to speed on a few of the terms, the best thing you can do is hit your local dispensary, get some goods, and experiment. Remember to always go slow — take small hits of flower and concentrates and feel the effects out before increasing consumption. And with edibles, wait an hour and half to two hours after eating a small dose for the effects to kick in before going further. Happy highing! 🍀
